orientation defined

clemson orientation

Who has a campus map in one hand, Clemson tote bag in the other, and a confused facial expression? The answer - this year's freshman class and transfer students as they navigated around campus and through the jam-packed orientation schedule last summer.

Undoubtedly lost at one point or another, these new students were eager to catch a glimpse of what their lives would become over the coming months. An endless barrage of meetings, tours, CAT bus rides, skits, and more filled the summer days, while the nights focused on forming bonds with the people that would become, and forever be known as, their first new Clemson friends.

By the end of the session, every student had been advised, registered, and introduced to some of the many traditions that make Clemson unique. Orientation is an experience that few students forget-either for the lasting memories or, sometimes, just a bad ID picture.

freshmen move-in

On August 19, 2006, roughly 2700 new students arrived to settle in and call Clemson University their new home. On this hot summer day, incoming freshmen were scattered all across campus and were welcomed by upperclassmen volunteers and help-out crews. Bryan Mall, the Shoeboxes, Johnstone and Holmes were surrounded by many new faces and anxious families. Coming from all over, freshmen brought car loads of their belongings, making sure move-in day would not be forgotten.

As soon as they step on campus, freshmen feel what it is like to finally be a true Clemson Tiger. It is the official start to their first year at Clemson and to the first of many new experiences. Throughout the day, the freshmen are introduced to many new people and even more lasting memories.

The reality of having an extremely tiny room is a pretty tough adjustment on its own and having to share that tiny room with another person may be harder. On top of this, some freshmen quickly find out that for the next nine months they will even be sharing a bathroom with an entire hall! Put everything together and this day can be pretty nerve-wracking. However, get past all the sweat, long lines, countless trips up flights of stairs, endless boxes and full suitcases, and there will be many smiling faces and eager students to find.

On this bittersweet day, some discover that saying goodbye to Mom and Dad was not half as hard as lugging their " must-have " up to their new room. Fortunately, organizations like the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Campus Crusade for Christ, the Civic and Service Club, the National Scholars, and many sororities and fraternities all have volunteers to come and lend a helping hand. The community also got involoved this year by sending help-out crews from First Baptist Chuch of Clemson and Cross Point Church. Volunteers usually arrive early and stay late, helping out in any way they can.

Volunteer Coordinator Laura Clay was in charge of recruiting and organizing move-in crews for the big day in August. She recalls the day postively, saying, "The cooperation I received from several groups on campus was incredible. Their numbers turned out in force and were truly an inspriation!" It is no doubt that without all the hard work from the volunteer crews, move-in day would have been even more hectic.

Move-In Day 2006 was yet another fun and exciting time for the Clemson community, as well as a great way to kick off a much-anticipated first-year experience that all freshmen are sure to remember.

The Reserve

The Reserve at Clemson is one of the more popular places to live off campus because the complex is newer and offers such amenities as free massages once a month.

Berkeley Place has just undergone a major renovation which included new siding for the buildings and fresh coats of paint. Berkeley has also been voted the number one place to live off campus for two years in a row.

Off the backside of campus are the Shoeboxes. The Shoeboxes are double occupancy rooms with a common bath or each hall. The residences house many living and learning communities, including the Clemson Business Experience, the RISE program, and Women in Animal and Veterinary Sciences.

Thornhill Village

Thornhill Village is made up of duplexes spread out along the far west side of Clemson's campus. The duplexes are some of the farthest on campus, but the distance is a trade off for the freedom they allow residents.

Low-rises

In addition to the high rises (Bradley, Lever and Manning or Brown Vick), there are also three low-rise buildings. Two of these residence halls, Harwood and Sikes, are commonly found where the third, Vickery, is made freshman dorms.

Clemson Perspective

there is no place like home

University Village 7

University Village, or UV as it is known on campus, is one of the larger housing complexes in the Clemson area. UV is popular because the CAT bus line stops right in front of the complex, so students do not have to worry about fighting for a parking space in one of the commuter lots on campus.

From Lever to Lightsey, Hart's Cove to the Reserve, students in and around Clemson always find a place to call home. For some, however, the search for the perfect pad is more challenging than for others. Freshman students and those upperclassmen wishing to participate in a "living and learning" community have a fixed amount of options and, therefore, easier decisions. While the newest class may have to decide whether to live on East Campus or West Campus (with West Campus being the more popular selection due to its access to dining and sports) or in a same-sex or co-ed dorm, the number of on campus residence choices for freshman is incomparable to the multitude of on and off campus alternatives available to upperclassmen. Of the upperclassmen choosing to remain on campus, sophomores, many of whom are or become a part of the Residential Life Association, Greek Life, or live in the conveniently-located Calhoun and Lightsey apartments, make up the largest percentage. It is not unusual, however, for students to spend three or even four years living in these areas. Gavin Richards, a junior living in Stadium Suites, notes, "As long as I'm taking more than 12 credit hours and am staying involved in student activities, it doesn't make sense for me to move off campus. I'd rather have easier access to what Clemson has to offer than to potentially sacrifice some experiences to move away. I definitely think students should spend at least two years living here." Nevertheless, the tendency is for juniors and seniors is to move to apartment or housing complexes within a 15-mile radius of the campus. Many nearby apartment areas, such as Hart's Cove and the Woodlands, have waiting lists for future years before the start of the current year. The newest off campus housing complex, the Park on Sloan, located in downtown Clemson, is expected to have similar popularity. Regardless of where students live or how long they live there, the college living experience is indescribable.

Greek Housing 8

One of the benefits of joining a sorority or fraternity is that you have the option of living on campus with your sisters or brothers for another year. Greeks can live in housing on Bruce Mall or in the Greek Quad on the eastside of campus.

Meg cannot find much time to relax between her Rally Cat practices and school schedule.

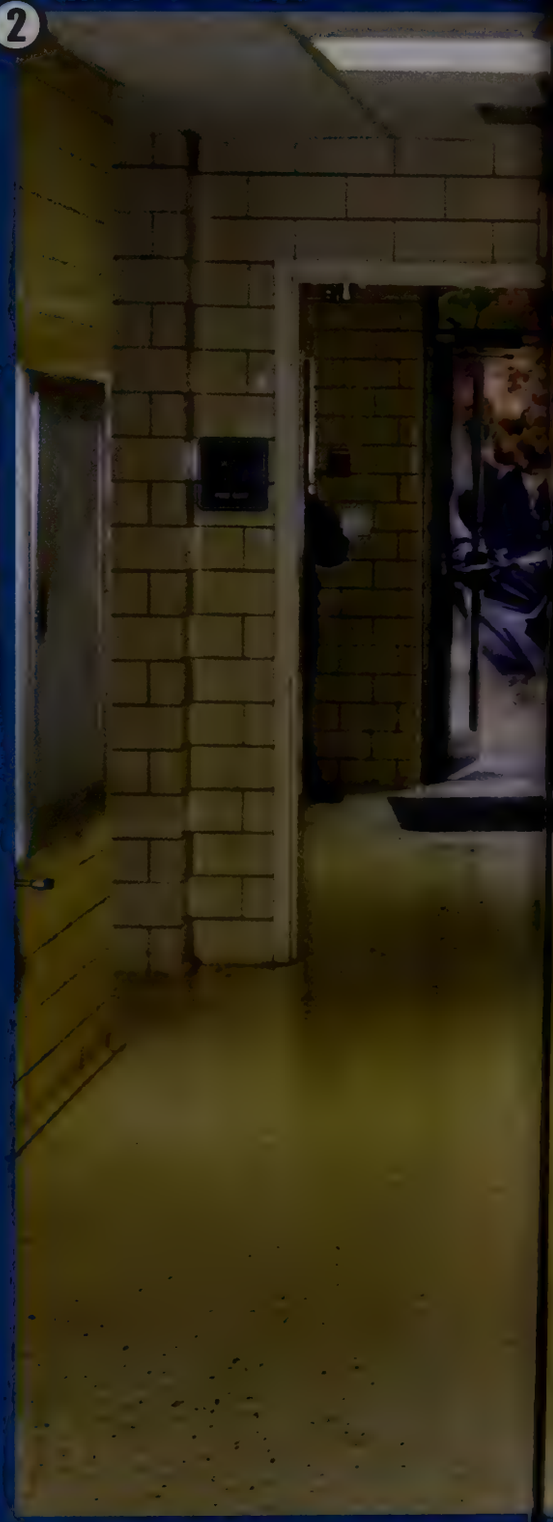
2 Meg makes her way to another exciting Spanish class to learn the language and culture.



For most college students, 545 a.m. on a Thursday morning is either a few hours before they get up, or a few hours after they have gone to bed. But for Meg Langworthy 545 a.m. is the time she must get up in order to attend her 6:30 to 7:45 a.m. workout for the Rally Cats. As if getting up so early was not hard enough, Meg then only has about an hour and a half to eat breakfast, shower and if there is time, do a little bit of studying before her 9:30 lab class. After getting out of lab at 12:15 p.m., Meg meets somes friends for lunch and enjoys a little time away from work and school. On a "good" Thursday, Meg takes a short 45 minute nap before she studies and prepares for her 3:30p.m. Spanish class. The class does not get out until 445, and Meg has to be dressed and ready for a five o' clock Rally Cat practice. She must take her book bag and change of clothes with her on the CAT bus so she can be dressed and ready to go at Jervey Gym as close to five as possible. A typical Rally Cat practice consists of multiple run throughs of dances to meticulously pick out problems and then work to correct them. This part of her day can be intense, and Meg is usually worn out by this point, but that does not mean she cannot be prepared for her next day's classes. The amount of time this usually takes depends on what she has happening in each class. On a good night Meg says she can probably be in bed by 12:00 a.m., which leaves her a little less than six hours before the craziness begins again.

[7] Ashley Gardner and Kaelen Crowley put off studying one night by taking pictures with all of the statues around campus such as Thomas Green Clemson in Tillman Circle.

When students come to college, one of the first lessons done not come from a textbook. The lesson teaches how to effectively waste time. Time wasters can range from something short and sweet like a midnight snack, to something more prolonged, like a weekend.

There are two main types of time wasters: the mindless time wasters and the productive time wasters.

Mindless time wasting activities require minimal brain activity. These include watching television or movies, eating, napping and playing video or computer games. Once classes let out for the day, students often feel completely drained and simply need some down time before hitting the books again.

Productive time wasters are beneficial because even though one task is neglected, another is accomplished. Some students choose to clean their rooms or apartments and do loads of laundry in lieu of schoolwork. Reading is another productive way for students to waste time. Even though it was not the assignment for next week's class discussion, there could still be some knowledge to gain from reading a more interesting book or magazine. The health-conscious student can go to Fike or to Bowman for a game of flag football or Ultimate Frisbee. The musically inclined student can choose to replace schoolwork by playing guitar, piano or other instruments.

The granddaddy of all time wasters is, of course, Facebook. While a few stoic individuals choose to resist this addiction, many students find themselves enslaved to all that Facebook has to offer. With each new feature added to the website, it becomes more and more addicting.

Students who procrastinate either work more efficiently under pressure or just do not want to face the reality of the daunting list of assignments and tests coming up. Either way, most eventually find a way to combat their desires to procrastinate, to finally buckle down and finish their work.

2. Bittersweet
3. Sense of Accomplishment
4. Relief
5. Fear of the unknown

It is a day like no other, filled with many emotions. One minute you are so excited you could scream and then the next you are overcome with a senese of sadness. This day is the day we have been anticipating for the past 4 or 5 years; it is graduation. Graduation is an exciting day and yet a sad one as we say goodbye to a place we have grown to love so dearly.

The emotions build as everyone lines up in Littlejohn. Then you hear the keyboard start to play "Pomp and Circumstance" and the emotions rise even more as you walk into the colliseum packed with family and friends there for your big day. The feelings inside continue to grow throughout the ceremony. And then, the moment you have been waiting for, your name is called. You receive your diploma and shake hands with President Barker. You did it; you are a college graduate. The feelings cannot get any better. Finally, in a bittersweet moment, you sing the Clemson Alma Mater for the first time as an alumnus.

Graduation seems like such a long way off as a freshman, but before you know it, you are walking across that stage as a graduate. The years here at Clemson are some of the greatest years of our lives. As much as we want to graduate, leaving Clemson is is like leaving our home.

first year experience

On August 19, close to 3,000 freshmen moved into Clemson ready to begin their college careers. Their classes had already been selected during summer orientation, and most were ready to get started. Some freshmen had reserved their books while others needed to get them before classes started. After they moved into their dorms and families had said goodbye, freshmen could truly begin to experience Clemson University. First, many of the freshmarrorly dorms had meetings throughout the day on Sunday so everyone could meet other students, their Resident Assistant and Resident Director. An Organizations Fair on Bowman helped freshmen learn about the different clubs and organizations they could be a part of while at Clemson. On Tuesday, August 22, all freshmen attended a summer reading progcam at Littlejohn Coliseum. Freshmen were expected to have read the book "Truth and Beauty" by Ann Patchett, who spoke during the assembly. Freshmen who wanted to try out Greek Life began rush during their first week on campus as well. Freshmen had to get accustomed to everything college life encompasses. They checked out Harcombe and Schilletter Dining Halls to see which one they would prefer to eat at with roommates and friends. Classes began on August 23, and freshmen had to find the right buildings and rooms in order to make it to the correct class. After a while freshmen began to develop a daily routine. Some routines would include a stop by the Academic Success Center, where students can get free tutoring or attend workshops that help with skills such as writing a college paper or refresher courses on biology. Freshmen were also encouraged to stop by the Michelin Career Center, especially if they were undecided as to what they wanted to major. First Friday was September 1 and many freshmen went to the parade, then Saturday, September 2, was the first home football game of the season. For some freshmen it was the first time they experienced Death Valley, while others had attended games in the past. The first year experience for most freshmen included on-campus housing with other freshmen. By housing freshmen together, many helped one another out and became good friends. Floor-mates with same classes formed study groups. Other freshmen found out studying in the dorms could be difficult and decided to give the libeary a try. Freshmen quickly learned how different their high school classes were from the classes they are taking at Clemson. Some were enrolled in classes as large as 300 students and quickly realized attendance was not required, but would help when exam time came. Freshmen started their first semester unsure of what to expect, but quickly found Clemson University was everything they could have wanted in a college.

New and returning students started the school year with a bang. With parties and picnics, students spent their first week at Clemson making new friends, eating great food, and the best part, receiving free gifts! For freshmen, Kick-Off Clemson was a fun way to meet their class-mates, learn of the numerous programs, clubs, and activites available on campus, and become better acquainted with the Clemson community.

On an early Saturday morning, cars began pulling in as freshmen arrived on campus. There were many upperclassmen available to help with move-in. Most of the afternoon was spent arranging rooms and meeting all the people on the hall. After such a stressful day, freshmen were able to hang out with their new friends on Bowman Field during the Freshmen Frenzy. There was plenty of free food, great entertainment, and prizes. What a great way to spend your first night away from home!

Floor meetings began the activites on Sunday. That night the parties continued. First up was the Welcome Back Social, students went to Edgar's Underground and had a chance to bowl, play billiards, have free food and drinks, and listen to music. Students then had a chance to catch a bus to Bi-Lo and Walmart during Moonlite Madness. This was a great chance to pick up any forgotten items and things to stock the fridge.

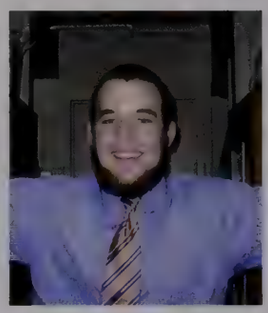
Quotes

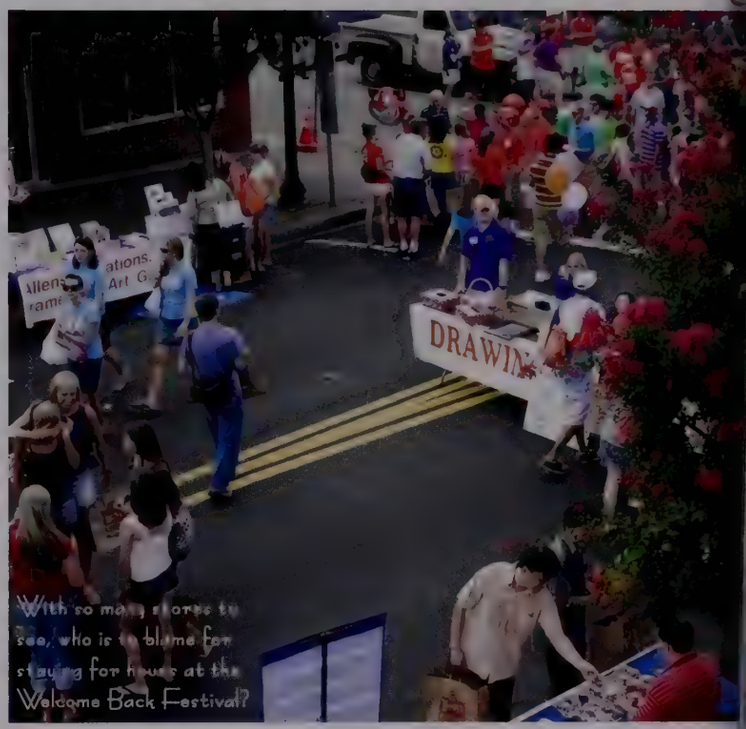
"The Welcome Back Festival was great because you got to see all the stores downtown, and you were really able to feel a great sense of community. Free stuff is always nice!"

"The Bowman Block Party had a lot of good music, however the best bands started later. It was unfortunate that these bands had fewer people to hear them. Dub Conscious was last, and they were an awesome reggae band."



"I loved the Welcome Back Festival. I was able to see all the stores in Clemson, plus I now have enough coupons to last me the whole year. It's great!!!"

"I really wish there would have been some activites separate from freshmen for transfer students. This way we could meet people our age and meet the other transfer students."



With so many stores to see, who is to blame for staying for hours at the Welcome Back Festival?

"Pride to me in Clemson is the feeling of having a second home, the smiles we share through new friends, the memories taken home every summer with us and the joy to be called a tiger." Lauren Burton kick-off clemson

life before class begins

With classes only a few days away, students at Clemson enjoyed their last few days of freedom with numerous festivals and fun activities. On Monday, freshman students had a chance to visit President Barker's house and meet the Barkers. There was lots of free food, and the Tiger Band performed for all to enjoy. What is more Clemson than barbeque sandwiches and Tiger Rag? After grabbing some BBQ, students made their way to Bowman Field for the CUSG Organization Day. Here, the myriad of clubs and organizations at Clemson set up tables. They answered questions and provided information to students about their organizations. If this was not enough excitement, students went to downtown Clemson for the Welcome Back Festival. This is an annual Clemson tradition where College Avenue shut downs for fun and partying in the streets. Students were able to catch a glimpse of the various stores and businesses available. There was music, entertainment, eating, socializing, shopping, and of course free stuff. To end this day, students headed back to Bowman Field for the Bowman Block Party. Local bands showed off their talent, while students enjoyed even more food and received more free stuff. As you know, free is a wonderful price for college students!

After such an exciting day, it was hard to imagine there were more events on Tuesday. Freshmen attended the Summer Reading Program where they discussed the summer reading book, Truth and Beauty: A Friendship. That night, students headed to the library to enjoy their last night of freedom. Wednesday started off the school year. That morning Direction & Donuts helped students find their classes while satisfying their sweet-tooth. That night, CLEMSONLIVE hosted the Outdoor Movie: "Napoleon Dynamite." What an awesome way to begin the school year!

freshmen events 06~07

Adjusting to life away from home for many freshman is eased by the numerous events put out by First Year Experiences and other campus organizations. These events give freshman the opportunity to interact and mingle with their peers, who are all in a similar situation: away from home, in a new place, with the need to eet new people and form new social networks. Programs, services, and events have been created to integrate students into e Clemson community and allow them opportunities to meet hundreds of other students!

The Week of Welcome, which included the Freshman Picnic on the President's lawn, Bowman Block Party, and Moonlight adness at the Central Walmart, was the first opportunity freshman had to interact with other freshman and members of e Clemson family. Freshman were also encouraged to attend Convocation and special college tutoring sessions put on by e Academic Support Center in Cooper Library; all aimed at decreasing the stress and anxiety associated with a new level of coursework and education. Classes like CU 101 and other introductory English and writing courses had professors that were amicable and willing to work with freshman one-on-one to make the transition easier and less painful.

Events like Beach Days and Freshman Night at Edgar's Union Underground provided Freshman the opportunity to just relax and meet new people while participating in recreational activities like dancing, bowling, and friendly games of pool. All members of the Clemson family, from students to professors and other community members, worked hard to make freshman feel welcome and reduce feelings of homesickness.

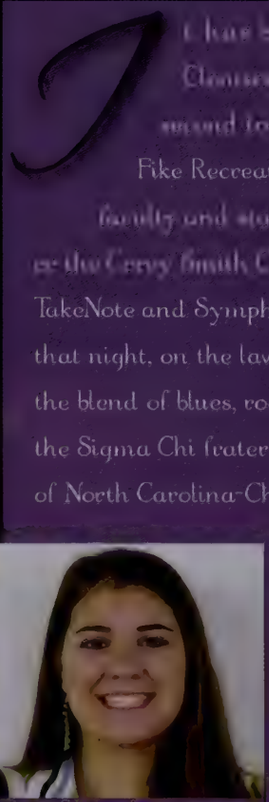
parents' weekend 2006

(SEPTEMBER 22-24, WHEN THE PARENTS CAME TO CLEMSON)



Jenny Bonnard

"My older sister came up for the weekend and we got lost. I showed her the campus and then we went to the game."

It has been four weeks since you have gone home but Parents Weekend provides a time for your family to come to Clemson and enjoy a fun-filled weekend with you. Special events throughout the campus were held September twenty-second to the twenty-fourth. Parents began to arrive late Friday afternoon, and a Student Affairs reception was held at Fike Recreation Center that evening, which allowed parents and students the chance to meet members of the administration, faculty and staff at Clemson University. Friday night, parents had the option to attend either the Brooks Center Extravaganza or the Corey Smith Concert. The Brooks Center Extravaganza featured performances by the Jazz Combo, String Quartet, Tigercats, TakeNote and Symphonic Band. The performances were free and a reception followed the event. The Corey Smith concert was also that night, on the lawn at Littlejohn Coliseum. By having the concert outside, more people were able to attend the show and listen to the blend of blues, rock and country that makes Corey Smith stand out. The concert was part of Derby Days, an event organized by the Sigma Chi fraternity. Saturday was busy with the Parent's Council Barbeque, followed by the football game against the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill. Many families attended the game with their child, and some experienced their first football game in Death Valley. Other than the events planned by the University, many parents simply spent time with their son or daughter whom they had not seen since late August. Families could be seen shopping in downtown Clemson all weekend long at Judge Keller's, The Tiger Sport Shop and Mr. Knickerbockers. Trips to Wal-Mart were also made to stock up on necessities such as laundry detergent, shampoo and bottled water. Students also took their families to eat at either Harcombe or Schilletter Dining Halls so they could truly experience what college dining is like in 2006. Students took their parents on a tour of some of their favorite places on campus, such as the Tiger Stab in the Hendrix Student Center, where families could enjoy ice cream made by Clemson students. Others preferred to let their parents take them out to eat at such popular places as Outback Steakhouse, Logan's Roadhouse, Red Lobster and Olive Garden. No matter what you do during Parents' Weekend, it is always a welcome break from the normal fall weekend in Clemson.

Tigerama is an event that Clemson students and alumni alike anticipate each fall. It's always thrilling to cheer for the skits and see who ultimately wins, all while spending time with other members of the Clemson family who share a common bond, love and pride for Clemson and its great traditions. The pictures above show many of the events that are a part of Tigerama, including the skits and performances by various Clemson groups.

Nothing beats the pride the Clemson community has for their school and it was shown during the 50th anniversary of Tigerama. Tigerama is one of the world's largest pep rallies and one of Clemson's favorite homecoming traditions.

Tigerama was started in 1956 by Clemson alumni Joe Sherman. Before returning to a career at Clemson, he worked at the University of Florida where he watched Gator Growl, UF's homecoming celebration and pep-rally. He witnessed how it brought the students and community together, while creating a sense of excitement and increasing school pride. He knew Clemson would be the perfect place for the same kind of event, so he recruited leaders of the Blue Key Society to develop a similar event and the rest is Tiger history.

Tigerama's participants and performers have varied over the years, but recently it has been an all-inclusive Clemson event featuring Clemson students and graduates. This year marked the 50th anniversary of Tigerama and the theme was "There's Something In These Hills: A Year of Anniversaries."

The ncees this year were Clemson graduates, Jane Robelot, former BS Early Show co-anchor, and Brian O'Rourke, the Director of evelopment and Alumni Affairs at Clemson University.

Tigerama, as always, was a huge success for both the rticipants and the spectators, and is an integral part of emson's homecoming tradition and after 50 years, still provides unforgetful experience for everyone involved.

6 One of the best parts of Tigerama are the skits. This year one skit was based on "Scooby Doo" and another one was based on a "Saturday Night Live" spoof of "Jeopardy."

7 Joe Sherman's famous speech was used as the origin for the theme for this year's Homecoming festivities, including Tigerama. It touches on common sentiments of nearly all Clemson students and alumni as it states, "There's something in these hills that has touched every one of them, something that has rubbed off on them in varying degrees something that has built within the breasts of all Clemson men and women an enduring spark akin to an eternal pride." President and Mrs. Barker kicked off the evening with a skit before letting the official Tigerama program begin.

"Clemson Pride is something that pervades the campus. I have not met anyone who does not have a sense of pride going to Clemson. Clemson fans demonstrate what Pride is all about.

Homecoming serves as a very special time at Clemson. Its beginning is marked by the planting of huge wooden posts on Bowman Field, which serve as anchors for the extravagant floats that are built during the week. Fraternity pledges and other organization members can be seen pomping their floats all through the night in the days leading up to the judging on game day.

Tigerama is one of the main events of Clemson Homecoming. It is the biggest pep rally of the year, and gives families and students a chance to come together to raise excitement for the game. This year's Tigerama was a special one, because it marked the 50th anniversary of the event.

Another thing that made this year's Homecoming special was ESPN's GameDay coming to cover the big game against Georgia Tech. Bowman Field was completely covered in orange for the program, and it helped get fans excited about the game.

Homecoming
a year of anniversaries...

Some fans would argue the best thing out this year's Homecoming weekend as the presence of ESPN's GameDay programming. To have the program broadcast from a school is an honor and takes a lot of lobbying to the sports channel. The location is decided by Sunday night with Top 25 teams given special consideration which was the case with this year's game, No. 12 Clemson playing No. 13 Georgia Tech. The crowd started forming in the early Saturday morning hours. Jumbo screens were set up so the crowd would be able to watch the show while they waited for their chance to show their Clemson pride on national television. The hosts even said this was one of the loudest crowds they had ever had in the show but the crowning point of the day was when analyst Lee Corso made his prediction that the Tigers would come out victorious by putting on the Tiger mascot head. The moment personified everything the Homecoming weekend was about: celebrating Clemson pride and tradition.

Clemson VS. South Carolina

Truly the game of the year for fans of both teams, the Clemson-Carolina game is something its fans look forward to all year. Victory is a claim for bragging rights, the conversation topic of holiday meals, and the ultimate source of pride in your school's football team.

The week preceding the game is one of the most exciting times on Clemson's campus, as there are many festivities occurring in an attempt to get the community hyped up and ready for the big game. Big Thursday, a long-standing tradition, gave students the opportunity to commune and celebrate Clemson's long term successes against the University of South Carolina. The event included a video showing of highlights from over one hundred years of rivalry and Cocky's funeral, complete with a fitting eulogy and cremation. The blood drive allowed for friendly competition among both schools to support a great cause and resulted in a donation of over seventy-five thousand units of blood in its 23 years of establishment. Tailgates are also a little more special for this game than others with many having fans from both teams present. The spirit of rivalry fills the campus and all its inhabitants for the entire weekend!

This year's game was played on November 23 on a beautiful day in Death Valley. Though the tigers played well and took the lead early, Steve Spurrier's Gamecocks proved to be too tough for this year's Clemson team. A missed field goal with only seconds left on the game clock meant a close, three point loss and defeat for the Tigers. It was the first time Clemson had lost to USC in five years, making it every Clemson fan's turn to say "Wait till next year!"

Death in the Valley

Death in the Valley has become a large part of the Halloween celebrations on the Clemson University campus. Each year, President and Mrs. Barker hand out candy to trick-or-treaters on the lawn of the President's Home. This year, in conjunction with CLEMSONLiVE, they also hosted a viewing party; showing the Halloween classic, "Beetlejuice" with a photo-booth nearby, so if any student wanted to take a picture to capture the boo-tiful moment, they were more than welcome to.

This was the first time in recent years that CLEMSONLiVE did not host Death in the Valley inside Littlejohn Coliseum, but that fact was made up for with the free ice cream which was passed around from the '55 Exchange, the brand new student-run retail location in the Hendrix Student Center. The CLEMSONLiVE organization could not have chosen a better year to move the festivities out of doors since the later October weather was perfect for watching a movie and trick-or-treating. Everyone in attendance was encouraged to dress up in their Halloween best with prizes given based on creativity and originality. The night is a great way for students to meet President Barker and his wife in a relaxed atmosphere while also getting to know their fellow students better.

Wish you could be in New Orleans for Mardi Gras? Unable to find the way to get there? Not a problem, Clemson brings New Orleans to Tillman Hall.

On February 24, 2007, CLEMSONLiVE hosted the annual TigerGras. TigerGras is Clemson's version of a Mardi Gras celebration in honor of Fat Tuesday. The 2007 TigerGras was held in Tillman Auditorium. The traditional Mardi Gras colors and food could be found everywhere. People were decked out in purple, green, and gold beads, while eating King Cake. However, the 2007 TigerGras theme was a little non-traditional. The theme for 2007 was "Totally TigerGras," a throwback to the wonderful 1980's. Entertainment for the evening included comedian Dan Aldoor and 80's cover band "The Breakfast Club." The night was also filled with games and giveaways. There was a contest for the best 80's outfit and a karaoke contest. Students were able to submit their favorite 80's songs to CLEMSONLiVE to be played during the event in honor of their friends.

Every year CLEMSONLiVE hosts TigerGras to provide an alcohol-free Mardi Gras celebration for the students. In the past, bands such as Switchfoot, American Hi-Fi, and Brooks and Dunn have come to help Clemson students celebrate Fat Tuesday. TigerGras is said to be the largest Mardi Gras celebration in the Upstate. It is a fun time for Clemson students, and a nice break from studying.

Each school year, CLEMSONLIVE, the university's entertainment enthusiast organization, and TigerPaw Productions arrange for more than eighty major concerts and other events to occur on campus at Littlejohn Coliseum. Employing more than 150 students, TigerPaw Productions allows for students to make the most of these attractions that come to campus, including discounted ticket prices, block seating, and advanced ticket sales to students.

This year included a number of concerts. Corey Smith kicked off the events in the fall with Derby Days, an event sponsored annually by Sigma Chi. Derby Days occurred on the lawn of Littlejohn and proceeds from the concert benefitted the Children's Miracle Network. That same week, TigerPaw Productions also held Last Chance Summer Dance, with four back-to-back acts, Hedley, Mario Vazquez, NEEDTOBREATHE, and Ashley Parker Angel.

On Thursday, October 5, rap enthusiasts were treated to a double act. Ludacris visited Clemson for the second time with R&B newcomer and Atlanta native Young Joc. Ludacris was promoting his new album Release Therapy, featuring his hit single "Money Maker." Also in October, Barney, the wonderful purple dinosaur, and his friends came to entertain and amuse children one afternoon.

Founded on a college campus in Alabama, Death Cab for Cutie is urrent hit among college students nationwide. Sugarland, the singer/songwriter duo, Jennifer Nettles and Kristian Bush, performed Clemson on November 19th. With more than 27 student instrumental, choral, and theatre ensembles to choose from; including Tiger Band, Clemson University Singers, Clemson Players, Clemson University Symphony Orchestra, Jazz Ensemble, Steel Drum Band, the University Dance Company, the Jazz Combo, TIGEROAR, and Mock Turtle Soup, the university offers numerous opportunities for budding amateur performers to get involved and improve their showstopping talents. The Department of Performing Arts influences many aspects of student life at Clemson, where students can major in the various disciplines, perform as amateurs or spend extracurricular time, or just attend the events put on by those involved.

The various production groups seem to always be rehearsing or preparing for another performance in the Brooks Center. This year alone the Clemson Players, the university's theatre ensemble, performed five weeks of different productions. These performances included the classic Henry V and Miss Julie, the musical melodrama Urinetown, and several student-directed works. Instrumental groups also offer students the opportunity to perform and enhance their musical skills. Bands include orchestra ensembles, jazz groups, and concert bands that play concerts at various times, and those that excite fans at home athletic events year-round. The pep bands and Tiger Band, the university's marching band that "Shakes the Southland," excite crowds at football and basketball games throughout the school year with every Clemson fan's favorite song, "Tiger Rag." The performing arts department is also home to the University Dance Company, which participates in various competitions, and numerous choral groups as well, opening opportunities for countless Clemson students to participate and enhance their artistic abilities.

Involvement in the performing arts at Clemson has many benefits for its participants. It allows students with similar interests to form life-long friendships while experiencing a wide variety of artistic development and genres while working with renowned professionals in their field of choice. Performances enable students to take pride in their hard work and talent development.

miss Clemson

In spring of 2006, 10 students gathered in the Brooks Performing Arts Center to compete for the title of Miss Clemson in the Miss Clemson University Scholarship Pageant. This year's theme was "Shake Your Groove Thing." Clemson Mortar Board started preparation for the event in October. The pageant was emceed by Assistant Vice President of Student Affairs, Rusty Guill, and Clemson's own, Miss Greenville County, Laura Stamm. Clemson's all-female a capella group TakeNote performed at the intermission.

After the talent competition, evening gown, and on-stage question competition, the judging panel chose junior Sarah Hayes, a nursing major representing the Clemson Wesley Foundation, a Methodist campus ministry. First runner-up was Katie Spearman, representing Omicron Delta Kappa, second runner-up was Marianne Wise for Kappa Kappa Gamma, and third runner-up was Melissa Lyerly for Delta Delta Delta. Nicole Goodrich was crowned Miss Congeniality.

When Sarah Hayes accepted the Miss Clemson position, she decided her platform would focus on community service and helping the local community. Also at the pageant, Hayes was named ad sales, interview and the talent winner. However, the most work Hayes put into preparation for the pageant was for the interview.

Throughout her reign, Sarah Hayes has been making numerous appearances at events such as First Friday and other events important to Clemson tradition.

The four contestants stay at the end of the parade. The ladies had to wait several days to find out who would be this homecoming queen, which was announced at Tigerama.

Every year Homecoming is a week-long event that is ends with a very memorable football game. This year was no different. Clemson students everywhere prepared themselves for the game against Georgia Tech. Preparation for big games usually involves body paint, lots of orange, and tailgating. However, there were a few young ladies who had to hold out from doing anything too over-the-top for Homecoming.

The Homecoming Court was narrowed down from 35 young women to five. Each young lady who entered the pageant represents a group or organization of her choice. They are judged on many different categories, some of which include casual wear, evening wear, and their commitment to the Clemson community. At the end of the pageant ten lucky ladies were placed in the top ten. The student body of Clemson then decided which of these ten contestants would become Clemson's Homecoming Queen for 2006.

After the votes were tallied and the voting website had closed, the winner of the title Home Coming Queen was given to Maura Lawson and was anounced at Tigerama. This year Maura Lawson represented the ladies of Take Note and last year she represented Sigma Chi fraternity. She is an active member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority and also Take Note, a female a capella group at Clemson University. Rounding out the Homecoming Court was Anna Rowe, Elizabeth Miffleton, Erin Hunter, and Renata Jones. Every one of these ladies were present for the crowning ceremony during Tigerama, the pep rally which is held the night before the Homecoming football game and is always a much-anticipated event.

speakers come to clemson

Clemson is honored to receive visits and speeches from many of the nation's top scholars and professors each year. On nearly any given day, there is a noteworthy guest somewhere on Clemson's campus, lecturing for specific classes or holding an open lecture for the Clemson faculty, staff, and students.

One of the more notable and routine guest speaker programs is the Calhoun Lecture Series. Hosted by the Strom Thurmond Institute, this lecture series brings cutting edge policy conversation to the people of South Carolina. Each semester, the series invites national and international lecturers to Clemson's campus to impart knowledge to its students and the surrounding public. This past fall, the series has brought a variety of lecturers on numerous topics. Lindsey Graham, US senator, spoke on future US policies. Dr. Charles S. Bryan, a distinguished professor of Internal Medicine and renowned author, came and honored Clemson faculty and students with a discussion on building character in today's society entitled "To Build an Edifice of Character: Why and How in Today's Society?"

The summer reading program for freshman is commonly a Clemson student's first encounter with the wonders of guest speakers at the higher education level. This past summer, freshman were encouraged to read Ann Patchett's novel Truth and Beauty before coming to Clemson. On the Tuesday before classes started, Patchett spoke to freshman and reminded them that, "The number one purpose of your time at Clemson is to broaden and deepen the scope of your intellectual ability." Speakers, like Patchett, enable students to do just that.

Clemson has played host to numerous other respected figures in individual classrooms and departmental lectures. Students are able to expand their knowledge base by listening and learning from such prominent speakers with varying backgrounds and perspectives on important current issues that affect us nationally and internationally. Each individual school and its professors often invite experts to come as guest lecturers in individual class courses, further enhancing the material covered in class. When students and faculty take advantage of the variety of views and the vast knowledge base that guests bring to the Clemson campus, they are able to expand their knowledge and increase the value of a Clemson education.

Martin Luther King Jr celebration

January 15, 2007 was more than just a Monday off and a three day weekend for the students of Clemson University. The date marked the 25th anniversary of activities and celebrations sponsored by the university and its' students in recognition of the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. The first day of commemorations held at Clemson for King occurred in 1982. Members of a group of men named Men Interested in Alpha along with men from Alpha Phi Alpha joined together to coordinate the first ever "Martin Luther King, Jr. Commemorative Observance" at the school. Clemson has since held the commemoration annually and added new events to the weekend-long tribute.

In January 1987, a commemorative march accompanied the service, thanks to the efforts of Clemson's Student Government Minority Council, Alpha Phi Alpha, and the university's Black History and Culture Committee. The march was warmly welcomed and has been performed annually with the service since it's debut in 1987.

The MLK Enhancement Committee was formed in the spring of 1988, consisting of members of Alpha Phi Alpha, the Council on Diversity Affairs, and various other committed members of the faculty, staff, student body, and surrounding community. Also in 1988, the President's Office agreed to help finance the MLK celebration. This monetary help, along with the MLK Enhancement Committee, enabled the memorial to grow and include additional programs such as trips, community service, contests, and an assortment of other events to supplement the commemorative service and march.

This year's MLK commemoration included all of these elements and more. The celebrations started on Thursday, January 11, with an oratorial contest for high school students. Some Clemson students participated in the MLK Civil Rights Trip from Thursday until Sunday by traveling to the previously racially-tense areas of Selma, Montgomery, and Tuskegee, Alabama. The weekend was also highlighted by Clemson's MLK Habitat Dream House Build. The house was constructed in Easley, SC and was the first MLK house in the United States to be built by students in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Monday marked the MLK Day of Service with an assortment of community service projects. Tuesday brought more activities. The community's commemorative march was held from Cox Plaza to the Brooks Center followed by the MLK Youth Awards Presentation. After that, a keynote address was given by Barbara Cross, a woman who experienced first hand the racially-motivated church bombing in 1963 that took the lives of four girls in Birmingham, Alabama. Wednesday the 17th, wrapped up Clemson's MLK celebration with MLK Tri-ART hosted by Barbara Cross and a showing of the film "4 Little Girls" in remembrance of the young girls who lost their lives in the bombing. The MLK remembrance not only helped Clemson to remember these little girls, but also to remember the nationwide struggle our country experienced with racism and how inspirational leaders, such as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., helped to lead us out of such troubling times.

international awareness

International Awareness Week is held in April every year to offer Clemson University students a chance to learn about other cultures which they might not have a chance to do otherwise. The kickoff event for the week was a concert of Classical Indian and American Jazz music fused together to create an unique and unforgettable sound. Later that night, CLEMSONLiVE sponsored a viewing of the movie, Syriana. The movie showcases how interconnected everyone in the world is, especially by the dependency on fossil fuels. During the week there was also a fashion show for the entire family where international students modeled the traditional fashions from their homelands with performances from students and local Clemson families. In total, thirty countries were represented. An international cultural exchange photo contest was put on in the Cooper Library. Guillermo Santiago Sandi-Urena's picture from Costa Rica was this year's winner. Any student, faculty, or staff member can submit a photo which must be taken outside of the United States and exhibit the true essence of the country.

The keynote speaker for this year's festivities was Andres Lara who is known as the "Cuban Guy". Lara is no stranger to adversity, having moved to America with no English language skills or any financial support; Lara spoke of his troubles with a delicate mix of humor and examples. His speech inspired the audience to not be afraid of the adversity, but to face it head on. On the final night of the International Awareness Week, Orchestra Africa was brought to campus by the African Caribbean Student Association. For many people in the Clemson community this was their first experience with traditional African music, and it turned out to be a very memorable one.

one world

New to this year's International Awareness Week activities was the effort to educate everyone about the ONE campaign, which is the effort to fight global poverty, AIDS, and corruption, focusing specifically on developing countries. This year, one thousand community members, students, faculty, and staff signed the ONE pledge bringing the national campaign total to over two million people. ONE hopes to increase the federal government's spending on the global fight against AIDS to one percent, or twenty-five billion dollars. That one percent would help provide water to almost nine hundred million people, send one hundred children to grade school, or prevent ten million children from becoming orphans from AIDS. International Awareness Week is a good platform for a campaign such as this because throughout the week everyone talks of tolerance and acceptance, and this was the perfect opportunity to put those words into action. IAW is a good experience for Clemson University to support because it helps to promote tolerance among all peoples and brings the Clemson community closer together.

Every spring, people look forward to Spring Break, warm weather, and flowers blooming. But along with these highly anticipated events comes the dreaded spring cleaning. However, this past spring on March 31, 2006, over 1,500 Clemson students took time out of their busy schedules to show their pride in the Clemson campus and its downtown. Clemson Sweep is an event held by Clemson University Student Government and other organizations on campus in order to clean and beautify Clemson—both the university and the city. For the first time last year Clemson Sweep was held both on and off campus. Through this event, Clemson students were given the opportunity to take pride in their campus and help revitalize what is an already naturally impressive landscape. Students worked from 10 am to 3 pm, planting, mulching, picking up litter, and even draining and cleaning the reflection pond in front of the Cooper Library. Students working off campus cleaned College Avenue and other side streets in downtown Clemson.

This spring Clemson plans to expand the reach of their efforts farther into the Clemson community. Clemson Sweep is a great opportunity for students to give back. Tyler Gailey, Student Services Director for CUSG said, "Cleaning goes way beyond just our campus. We all use the community around us, and we should take pride in making the entire Clemson community a clean place to work and live."

relay for life

Relay for Life has become a tradition on the Clemson University campus and around the country with more than three million Americans participating in Relay events during a given year. For twenty-four hours this past April on Strom Thurmond Plaza, teams from student organizations, residence halls, sports teams, and groups of friends help to raise almost $150,000, one of the highest in the Clemson University chapter's history. Relay for Life is a fundraising program for the American Cancer Society, which uses the money earned to fund the research and advocacy for cancer at local ACS chapters. A person from each team must be walking at any given time during the twenty-four hour period to stay qualified. There is food, games, and music to help the volunteers stay motivated during those critical early hours of the morning while friends, who not participating in the Relay, often stop by to cheer participants on and keep morale high. This year's top fundraiser at Clemson was Sean Cavanaugh who walked in honor of his mother who is fighting brain cancer. The top fundraising team was the Clemson Swimming and Diving Team with a goal of $15,000 which they exceeded by almost $500. Relay for Life is always a night to remember because it is a way for the community of Clemson and students from the University to come together to celebrate cancer survivors and honor the ones who were not as lucky, while raising money to continue the fight against a horrible disease that has touched each of our lives in some form or another.

clemson traditions

Although development has been a dominant theme in the Clemson environment over the last one hundred years, certain traditions and landmarks have remained a constant presence here on campus.

One of the oldest traditions in Clemson's history is the singing of the Alma Mater. During the military days of Clemson, freshmen were required to wear rat caps and would wave them during every football game until Homecoming. Today, that tradition is reflected by students who wave their hands during the Alma Mater at every large sporting event.

Many other traditions surround Clemson sporting events, including Tigerama and "Running Down the Hill." Tigerama, which is basically the campus's largest pep rally held before Homecoming, was started in 1956 by Clemson Alumni Director Joe Sherman. He was took the idea from the University of Florida's own event called Gator Growl and believed that Clemson had the perfect environment for a similar spirited event. Such spirit is also reflected in the exhilarating start to every football game as players run down the hill after rubbing Howard's Rock. Called the "twenty-five most exciting seconds in football," Clemson football players today follow an old tradition, where players used to dress at Fike Field and run to the gate and down the hill onto the field. Most Clemson students find pride in the rich tradition that surrounds the Clemson campus and its alumni wherever they go.

on-campus extracurricular

With over 17,000 students, 300 on campus organizations and a host of concerts and other activities, students easily fill their time.

What is there to do on campus besides studying? Many Clemson students manage to involve themselves in several of the nearly three hundred identified on campus organizations and other extracurricular opportunities. The campus is always bustling with activities of a vast variety, perfect for the diverse student body that creates the Clemson experience.

One area that Clemson students pride themselves in is their service to the Clemson community and those in need outside of campus. Jackie Hamm, a sophomore,says, "I enjoy being part of Tigers Who Care (TWC), because it allows me the opportunity to get involved with a lot of different community organizations." Just in October, TWC offered trips for its members which included a soup kitchen, a low-income day-care center, a center for foster children, a retirement home and Habitat guard. Tigers Who Care, Special Cats, Habitat for Humanity, Circle K Club and alternative break programs all allow students to involve themselves in activities in which they take pride.

With the Fike Recreation Center and numerous athletic clubs, many students choose to spend their extra time working out and improving their physical fitness. Students may fill their time playing intramural sports, pick-up games on Bowman Field or just taking a jog around Clemson's beautiful campus. Amy Merrill, a junior business major from Virginia, plays on the girls club soccer team. Amy says that the team has allowed her "to make great friends and have lots of fun traveling and just playing a game we all enjoy." And for those not interested in playing sports, it seems there is always an athletic event, varsity or club, somewhere on campus that many students attend in order to cheer on the Tigers or their peers.

Many campus activities and organizations center on professional development and achievement. Nearly every major academic department has a club or honors fraternity that fosters professional development and creates opportunities for students to explore their future professions. Emily Waggoner, president of the Dairy Science Club and sophomore animal science major from Pendleton, spends countless hours working on activities and functions for clubs like Future Farmers of America, Block and Bridle Club and the Dairy Science Club. "The Dairy Science Club is an organization designed to promote the dairy industry. Through various activities, the members gain hands-on cattle experience and allows them the chance to see a different side of agriculture that does not always get the recognition it deserves. In general, we learn about the dairy industry and the values of hardwork while having a lot of fun in the process." Student Media organizations, such as TAPS, The Tiger, and CTV, allow for budding journalists, graphic designers, editors and writers to explore their future careers on an amateur level.

There is also a variety of organizations on campus that allow students to explore different cultures and draw from the student body. With more than seventeen thousand students from every state in the nation and eighty different countries, Clemson has a vast array of student-developed and student-led extracurricular activities. The events planned by the various organizations allow the student body to explore and experience different cultural practices without ever leaving the country.

Clemson's campus is always bustling with opportunities for students to involve themselves and create the most of their four short years here. From academic to service organizations and Greek life to sporting events, the life of a Clemson student is always packed with extracurricular activities!

hings students spend their time doing while off campus...though it is a mall town, there is always something to do!

Nearly everyone that attends Clemson is one day faced with the question "What in the world is there to do up there with all those cows?", and those of us who have lived this life quickly learn just to smile coyly in response without getting defensive. We know there truly is something special in these hills that makes our time here very worthwhile and always packed with things to do. Though it may not have the hustle and bustle of a metropolitan community, little Clemson offers much for its inhabitants to do in their time away from classes and campus.

For starters, the location presents numerous prospective activities for students. Clemson is on the lake, as well as only a short drive away from the mountains. What could be more perfect than relaxing with your buddies at the lake following a day of studying and class? Lake Hartwell offers students boundless opportunities, from waterskiing and wakeboarding to sunbathing and simply enjoying the beautiful orange and purple sunsets over the lake. Lisa Slagh, a junior engineering major from Greer, says that being on the lake is a major benefit to the Clemson student body. "I love being able to go to the lake with my friends and wakeboard after spending time in class. It's a great way to unwind and enjoy everything Clemson has to offer." Lisa and her brother Jimmy, a freshman, go wakeboarding with the Clemson Wakeboard Club in their free time. The club was started by junior genetics major Bucky Berlin, who loves when students come out and spend time on the lake. He has used the club to help other students access the lake and has, in turn, taught many of these students to share his passion for watersports. Also nearby, the Blue Ridge Mountains offer endless opportunities for outdoor enthusiasts. Many students take advantage of the proximity to the mountains and go camping, hiking and backpacking on breaks and weekends.

And then there is downtown where there are lots of shops filled with the Clemson student's staple attire and lots of bars where students congregate in their free time. Once initiated at Tiger Town Tavern on one's twenty-first birthday, the fun may begin. Evenings downtown offer students an opportunity to socialize with their peers and relax following a stressful week of exams, papers and other obligations. The bars downtown offer different environments for different groups of people and students often find the one in which they prefer to spend their time.

The rest of our time is largely built around the lifelong relationships we develop with our fellow students. Church activities, community clubs and service to the community of Clemson foster the development of these relationships. Junior Ryan Spurrier has devoted large amounts of time to the Clemson United Methodist's Wesley Foundation. Through Wesley, Spurrier has formed bonds with fellow Clemson students who share and support him in his faith. Spurrier bases his relationships with other people on his faith, "during His life, Christ set forth a pattern of community and fellowship among His disciples that the church tries to recreate today. Living in the world, He knew the need that people have to celebrate together, cry together, lift one another up and hold one another accountable. That's what Wesley allows me to do." These relationships, as well as the ones developed through time with roommates and classmates, allow for the creation of some wonderful and unforgettable memories that make life in this rural area something that its inhabitants take pride in and will never forget.

2 ALONG FOR THE RIDE

Many commuter students ride the buses to and from classes with residential students catching rides to Anderson, Seneca, and Central when they need to go shopping

3 CLIMB ABOARD

With gas prices rising over the last year, many students have started to carpool or ride the CAT bus to campus. With many lines serving local apartment complexes, it is usually more convenient to ride the buses than to drive a car to the University campus.

This year marks the ten year anniversary for the Clemson Area Transit. The system is fare-free, meaning riders do not have to pay to ride. Cost is supplemented by the City of Clemson, Clemson University, Town of Central, Town of Pendleton, South Carolina Department of Transportation, Anderson County, and the Federal Transit Administration. This past year, Clemson Area Transit was voted the best transit system in South Carolina and in years past, it has been recognized as one of the largest fare-free transit systems in the entire country.

In the ten years since the CAT Bus' inception, the number of routes have continued to increase. During the fall of 2006, there were two new routes added. The first one services the Central area, starting at the Hendrix Student Center, and making stops at the Central Wal-Mart, downtown Central, and Southern Wesleyan University, before returning to the Hendrix Student Center. Seneca is also getting a route on the CAT bus line. The line has three loops: residential, business, and express. The residential and business are connected with the residential loop happening during the first part of the hour, and the business loop taking place during the last part of the hour-long circle. The express loop goes from Seneca to Clemson during a twenty-five minute period, so that students who live in Seneca can make it to campus in a reasonable amount of time. Hopefully these new lines and the other improvements will be able to help keep Clemson Area Transit around for another ten years!

parking what's right and wrong

Where does Parking Services cross the line? Many would argue the prices of tickets and fines are too high; others would say it is not fair to be penalized for parking in unauthorized areas. Still, the majority of people would complain about weekly updates on where you are allowed to park and, the majority of the time, where you are not allowed to park. The root of all of these problems is the lack of available parking spaces on campus.

Clemson's campus is able to accommodate parking for 13,300 different cars. However, just this past year parking services sold over 15,000 permits to students, faculty and staff. This situation obviously sounds unfair for the people paying for the parking permits, and everybody knows these permits cost a pretty penny. Freshmen and sophomores have to pay $134 and everybody else has to pay $100.50 in order to bring their cars on campus. However, in the next few years, all of the parking permits will be $134 no matter what year you happen to be. Along with parking permits costing a lot of money, so do the tickets students, faculty and staff receive. Tickets range from $20 to $30 depending on the reason for receiving it. However, if you are not lucky enough to only receive a ticket and your car becomes impounded by Parking Services, it will cost you over $70 to retrieve your vehicle.

For all of the terrible things said about Parking Service, they are working diligently to find solutions to many of the daily parking problems students face. They have devised a project which will help solve the majority of the problems and also a Transportation Master Plan which they hope will be implemented by March 2007. Until Parking Services is able to fix all of its dilemmas, it might just be easier for students to use other means of transportation while on campus, such as CAT buses or bicycles.

LAST MINUTE CRAMMING

Cramming during the class change time truly is an artform. As many college students will tell you with so much going on in their lives, it does not take long to develop the skills necessary to execute the perfect " cram ". Your location, whether it is outside or in the hallway, does not matter as long as you get those last few pieces of information before you walk into that classroom for the test.

class change
the 15 minute rush

It's what you do with the free time you have in between classes, no matter how long it may be. The options of what to do with your time at Clemson are virtually endless.

"With the time between classes, I usually grab a bite to eat, watch tv., do some last minute studying or look over material for my next class."

Briana Martinez

Whether its a 45 minute workout at Fike or just grabbing a cup of coffee from Einstein Bros in the Student Center, everyone has some free time between classes. Students can be found everywhere, from the Cooper Library to Harcombe Dining Hall. Besides grabbing a bite to eat at one of the dining halls, some students enjoy stopping by the Hendrix Student Center and browsing the bookstore. While in the Student Center, students can also get a quick bite to eat if they do not have the time or patience to wait in line at the dining halls. The University Union is also a popular place for students to visit during a break. They can do many things such as check their mail, get a chicken sandwich from Chick-Fil-A, or pick up information on upcoming events at Clemson from the Union front desk. Those students who have longer breaks between classes may end up at Fike; others get in that load of laundry they have been meaning to do for the past 3 weeks. For those who get up for an 8 o'clock class and do not have another one until 11 o'clock, a nap or simply relaxing in their room might be a top choice. On a sunny day, pick-up games of ultimate frisbee and football can be found on Bowman Field. For students wishing to relax, study, or simply take a break but want to be outside, the ampitheater might be the perfect place to go. Of course, the Cooper Library is open if students need to stop in and print out something for an upcoming class or to study, either alone or with a group. The library also houses Java City and Snax and Stax, so students can buy something to snack on while they study or read the newspaper. No matter if you have 2 hours or 20 minutes between classes, there is something for you to do on the Clemson campus.

on campus jobs

Fitting in a shift between classes, labs, and meetings has never been easier than when you work in the same place as you study, and what could be more convenient than that?

Just as one would do in the real world, students at Clemson University choose to work at different jobs for various reasons, whether it is for the convenience of location, the experience which will help in the future, or because of a special interest or hobby the student has.

Many people choose on campus jobs based on their school schedule and how flexible their employer is willing to be with their work hours. Places like the Cooper Library, the Student Union, and the Hendrix Center are where many students can find jobs that will let them work around their class schedules. These buildings are located centrally on campus, so they are easy to get to after classes if a student has an afternoon shift.

Aramark, Clemson's dining facilitator, provides student-employees with the benefit of culinary experience. Employees have the choice as to where they would like to work, whether it is in one of the dining halls or one of the other on campus eateries, such as Fernow Street Cafe or Chili's Too.

Students in the Parks, Recreation, and Tourism Management department must take at least two hours of a practicum class to graduate. A handful of students chose to work on campus at Littlejohn Coliseum; they work with different aspects of LJC, such as "front of the house," meaning they work in the Box Office or the Guest Services Department, as well as the "back of the house" where they construct stages or help bands unload equipment before a show. Whatever aspect of campus a student is interested in working with, there are a variety of positions available to fit their needs.

the top spots in Tiger Town

For many of us, Clemson holds so many "bests" that it is impossible to narrow them down to just one favorite. Whether it is driving around town on a fall afternoon, soaking up as much sun as you can on Lever Beach, throwing the football with friends out on Bowman Field, going for a run around Perimeter Road, catching up with roommates over Ben and Jerry's Ice Cream, walking down Main Street, searching for another Clemson t-shirt to add to the collection, or just hanging out on campus during a gorgeous day; Clemson is full of places and things to call your favorite.

What is great is students' ability to make their own memories of Clemson and what "bests" it has to offer and knowing those memories will stay with us forever. So the next time you find yourself saying "I love that about Clemson!", remember you are not the only one because everyone, friends and alumni, loves this place. Once you are a part of the Clemson family, you can always call it home no matter where life takes you. It is the BEST!

TIGER SLAB: One of the key features of the '55 Exchange is the Tiger Slab, which is a twist on the marble slabs in Marble Slab and Cold Stone Creamery stores. The Slab allows customers to choose an ice cream flavors and mix in their favorite topping bringing back an old tradition

With Clemson University's history as a land-grant university, it should come as no surprise that student-produced food items are such a tradition. For the past few years, the only place to buy Clemson ice cream was in the Hendrix Student Center Food Court and customers were not able to purchase other food products at the same time as their milkshake or sundae. A generous gift from the Clemson University Class of 1955 made the '55 Exchange, a retail location in Hendrix Student Center which sells Clemson-made products, a reality. The items sold here include organic produce, meat, blue cheese, and, of course, ice cream.

One of the most innovative features of the '55 Exchange is the Tiger Slab, where customers can mix in their favorite toppings into their choice of ice cream, which is made in a manufacturing center run by the Department of Food Science and Human Nutrition on the Clemson University campus. The employees at the '55 Exchange also offer great entertainment because, in addition to their ice cream, they serve up a wealth of Clemson history and facts. The employees are also able to suggest new flavors to add to the menu. Some of the new flavors include Hot Apple Pie and Peanut Butter Explosion.

So far, business has been booming for the store. On game days, lines will be four people wide and stretch out the door! It is not just students that enjoy the yummy treats at the '55 Exchange, alumni of all ages bring their children and grandchildren back to relive the good old days and get the next generation ready for Clemson!

community

At Clemson University, community service is very important; it is a way to keep Clemson students involved in the community and provide them with opportunities to develop a strong sense of character and responsibility. Community service is also a way for students with common interests and goals to come together to make the world a better place.

There are many activities and organizations for students who want to perform community service to join. The Alternative Spring Break Program provides opportunities for students to become involved in long distance community service. The programs are geared toward servicing the world, not just the community. They offer students the chance to join on and off campus organizations who travel to places in need of aid during academic breaks. Past locations have included Gulfport, Mississippi and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Clemson University also provides students with opportunities to become involved with the surrounding area. Student organizations such as Tigers Who Care and Gamma Sigma Sigma offer membership to students wanting to make community service a large part of their lives. These and other student run organizations have made it their priority to assist Clemson Community Care and the March of Dimes, while also showing appreciation for local heroes by providing Dinner for Firemen.

Clemson University also provides rewards to students for their participation in community service such as housing for students committed to serving the community. These students are enrolled in the Civics and Service House Program.

Students enrolled in the Civics and Service House Program have the opportunity to live in 'lemson House with students who share the same passion for community service. The Civics nd Service Program requires interested applicants to be a full-time student with the ability o live in on campus housing, to be in good academic standing and have a GPA of at least 2.0. tudents must also participate in seminars, workshops and service activities.

There are also other awards available for students who participate in community service. 'lemson University offers scholarships and grants to students for fulfilling a certain amount f community service each semester; scholarships such as the Community Scholars Program ives students financial assistance for their involvement.

Clemson also makes it a priority to involve students who may not be a part of a particular rganization in community service. The biannual blood drive is set up for people who are not able o be involved in the hands-on aspect of community service. It is a competition between Clemson 'niversity and the University of South Carolina to see which school can collect the most blood uring the week leading up to the Clemson-Carolina football game. Another program that elps to involve students is the Habitat for Humanity. Each year during Homecoming, students ome together to build a home for a family in need. The building of this house is open to anyone; raternities, sororities, and every student in between to come together to set a positive example or the community.

The Gantt Intercultural Center strives to bring a celebration of diversity to Clemson's campus. The Gantt Intercultural Center has a plush lounge area on the first floor of the Hendrix Center for students to lounge or work. They also hold a variety of events throughout the year.

Most notably, the Gantt Intercultural Center sponsors the Martin Luther King, Jr. Day of Celebration in collaboration with other organizations. Events during the day include a MLK Habitat House, a day of service, a commemorative march, high school competitions for essays and speeches, and also speakers. Reverend Joseph Lowery was the keynote speaker for the MLK Day of Celebration in 2006.

The Gantt Intercultural Center also sponsored a Latin Fest. The Latin Fest had food from a variety of countries and they all were delicious. The Latin Fest also features music and dancing. Each of these elements contribute to the fun atmosphere that embraces Latin culture and its offerings.

The Gantt Intercultural Center also organizes Clemson's annual International Awareness Week. The International Awareness week is most notably recognized for the huge festival held on Bowman field. At the festival, students are invited to purchase tickets that allow them to sample foods from around the globe. To some students, the festival is a picture of how the world should be—everyone from different backgrounds meeting together in harmony to enjoy absolutely delicious food.

The Gantt Intercultural Center also offers the Clemson Language Partner Program. This program connects two Clemson students; one student is an international student and the other student is a native-English speaker. Time outside school is still always packed with things to do for Clemson students, and fall, winter, spring, and summer breaks are certainly no exception. It is during these times that students are able to create many of their most poignant memories of time spent as a college student, through trips, missions, and recreational activities with other students, school organizations, and individual families.

The short fall break offers a little more than a long weekend pause in the student's hectic fall semester routine. Many students choose to go home and to spend time with their families, while others elect to form groups that travel to the mountains or somewhere nearby Clemson just to get away for a brief stretch of time. This year, fall break fell on election day, so many students travelled home to vote. The winter break between semesters allows students a true break from the hustle and bustle of school with nearly a month off without classes, papers, projects, or meetings. Most travel home to be with their families for the Christmas holidays and to eat mom's cooking and visit with childhood friends that also return to hometowns for the holiday season. Several travelled to Nashville to attend the bowl game, and still others managed to work at holiday jobs.

Spring and summer breaks offer similar travel opportunities. Each spring break, various Clemson student organizations plan trips to various part of the country and even the world to perform missions outreach and explore other cultures and societies. During Spring Break of 2006, Clemson students could be found in Guatemala on a senior nursing community project, New Orleans with the Alternative Break Program, or Chicago with Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Other students travel with friends and roommates on cruises or to exotic resorts to lose the pressures of collegiate studies. Summer break offers students an opportunity to work for an extended period of time at various internships or externships across the country in various occupations and the ability to travel and study abroad alone or with university sponsored and structured groups.

Like most of college life, the pauses between class times are packed with tons of opportunities and experiences that help occupy student's memories for years and years to come.

While 2006 was a good year for Clemson University, it was one that was also filled with sadness and loss. During 2006, the Clemson family lost exceptional students, an admired coach a devoted professor, an inspiration leader, and a beloved former president. As a small tribute, we have compiled a short biography on some of the Clemson family who have died this past year. Chronologically, Clemson lost Michael Zebuhr, Tiffany Marie Souers, Walter T. Cox, Jr., Jarrett Foster, Kenneth Vickery, and Martin Davis. Each of these people played their own important and unique role at Clemson. After each death, the Clemson community came together to mourn and remember the precious life lost. Memorial services were held and memorial funds established to continue the legacies of those lost. During a time of loss, such as losing a member of the Clemson family, Clemson manages to find a way to come together and truly embrace President Barker's vision of "One Clemson." Although dealing with death and loss is sad, Clemson comes together to help one another with the pain. While these beloved six souls may not be here at Clemson physically any more, their legacies will live on in the hearts of fellow Clemson Tigers whose lives they have touched forever.

Tiffany Marie Souers

1 Tiffany Marie Souers, a 20-year-old civil engineering student from Ladue, Missouri, was found dead in her off-campus apartment in Central SC, Friday, May 26, 2006. In addition to being a strong student, Souers was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. She was also remembered fondly by an Easley charity for her devoted service and volunteer hours. A funeral was held in her hometown shortly after the incident, and a memorial service was held in Clemson once classes started in the fall so that her friends and classmates could attend and pay their respects. Tiffany Marie Souers was an intelligent, friendly girl who had a bright future ahead of her. She is greatly missed by her family, friends, and the entire Clemson community.

He directed the Master of Science program in architecture and had accumulated a significant record in both research and practice.

Died November 3, 2006

Walter T. Cox, Jr.

6 Clemson University lost one of its legends on June 28th, 2006, when Walter Thompson Cox, Jr., former president and tireless servant of the school passed away. Cox, born in Belton, South Carolina in 1918, had a lengthy and distinguished career, remarkable for its complete devotion to Clemson. At Cox's memorial service at the Brooks Center on July 1, many of those who knew him gathered to celebrate his life and career. Eulogies came from such individuals as President James Barker and former President Robert Edwards.

As a member of the Class of 1939, he was a company commander in the cadet corps and played offensive guard for the football team. He graduated with a Bachelor of Science in General Science and was planning to leave the school when Coach Jess Neely asked him to remain on the team an additional year. While earning a postgraduate degree in Teacher Education, he participated in Clemson's 1940 victory over Boston College at the Cotton Bowl. Soon, Coach Frank Howard offered him a job as football line coach, baseball coach, and ticket manager. During this time, he even helped Howard clear the land for Death Valley. Later, he would become public relations and business manager for the college. Except for a year of service in the Army, when he fought in the Pacific, he would always work for Clemson. Perhaps his most important position came in 1955, when he was made Vice President of Student Affairs. The title "Dean" Cox would stick with him even when he no longer held the job. In this capacity he was heavily involved in some of the most tumultuous and dramatic changes in the school's history. Almost immediately he was faced with transition to a demilitarized, coeducational Clemson College. Later he was charged with preparing the student body for the matriculation of Harvey Gantt, and so played an important role in the famously peaceful integration of the school. His elevation to the presidency came in 1985, at a crisis point for Clemson. President Bill Lee Atchley, beleaguered by multiple athletic scandals including investigations over NCAA violations, and also disagreements with the Board of Trustees, had resigned. The Board then called on Cox to temporarily serve as president. During Cox's eight month tenure, he restored confidence in Clemson's leadership both inside and outside the university. He either fired or forced the retirement of officials involved in the scandals, and his new athletic director, Bobby Robinson, reaffirmed the primacy of academics at Clemson by developing a plan of donating percentages of athletic revenue to academic scholarships. After stepping down from Clemson's highest office, Cox was both an assistant to the President and the Vice President for Institutional Advancement. He would continue to labor on the university's behalf even despite official retirement in 1987.

[2] Freshman football player Ray Ray McElrathbey brought positive publicity to the Clemson campus this past school year when he was named ABC News Person of the Week. At nineteen years old, he has temporary custody of his 11-year old brother Fahmarr, because their mom has a drug problem and their dad has a gambling problem. After bouncing between foster homes, Ray Ray and Fahmarr now share an apartment near the Clemson campus.

"He's like an unofficial mascot," McElrathbey said. "He's more like an unofficial player. He runs around with us a lot. He loves my teammates and my teammates love him. He's kind of famous now actually." Because the outpouring of support was so overwhelming, Clemson officials petitioned the NCAA, asking them to waive a rule that prohibits athletes from receiving "gifts, cash or other benefits not provided to the general student population." The waiver allows McElrathbey to accept offers of free babysitting, clothing and food. For a 19-year-old thrust into the role of parent, McElrathbey seems to have the right perspective. "I would consider myself a learning parent. I wouldn't say I'm a great parent, as yet. But I'm striving to be the best parent I can be," he said. "I just try to make him feel more comfortable, just make him feel loved."

Basketball Success

Tiger basketball experienced more success this year than it has in least the last decade, exciting fans, teammates, and students alike. Clemson's regular season 21 wins stand as the most by a Clemson team in 10 years and tied for the third most in a regular season in school history. The Tigers lost just three games by over five points all year, meaning Clemson either won, or was in 27 of its 30 games until the final minute. Overall, the success and Clemson pride made the season an exciting one for fans of all ages!

Snow Day 2007

Clemson students awoke to a winter wonderland on February 1, 2007. For the first time for many students, classes were cancelled. As early as six in the morning, just after the announcement that classes had been cancelled, students were outside playing in the golf-ball sized snow flakes that so really visit a southern winter. Bowman field was covered with students engaging in snowball fights and building snow creatures, proving that college students are still truly children at heart. Once the excitement wore off, most students spent the afternoon catching up on much needed rest or school work and relaxed with friends.

The annual Victor Hurst Convocation opened the 2006-2007 school year. Convocation featured speeches from President Barker and Daniel Dustin, professor and chairman of Parks, Recreation and Tourism Management at the University of Utah.

Addressing an auditorium full of faculty, staff, and student organizations, Dustin said, "Few people are in a better position to influence the future than college professors. We are in a unique line of work that gives us freedom to learn, create, and teach."

President Barker in his speech praised the university's achievements, highlighting Clemson's new Top 30 ranking in the U.S. News and World Report's college rankings. "It is your effort and creativity and energy that has made this progress happen. You have done it by taking small step every day to improve the quality of yo work," Barker said. a word from president barker

Dear Clemson Students:

As I reflect on my seven years of service to our alma mater, I realize what an honor it is to be allowed to serve my school, and to represent its faculty, staff, alumni and students to the wider world.

Of all of these important groups, students are at the heart of a university. You are the reason we exist. You are the creative energy at the center of our being. You are our link to the future and, as graduates, you will always be a part of this intellectual community.

This year saw the passing of long-time Dean of Students Walter Cox. You may know him only as the statue of a man seated on a bench in Cox Plaza. But during his 70 years of service to Clemson – as student, athlete, coach, dean and president – Dean Cox personified one of our university's core values: "The students come first."

This is a pledge we kept this year as we moved into the ranks of the nation's Top 30 public universities. Research and public service are key components of our university mission, and we are enlarging Clemson's "footprint" statewide. Our goal to be a Top 20 university will support economic vitality and job creation for South Carolina. This, in turn, will help our students, who will always come first at Clemson.

Living among you on campus is a rare privilege for Marcia and me. Thank you for enriching our lives and for allowing us to be a part of your Clemson experience.

Go Tigers!

Sincerely,

James F. Barker, FAIA
President

new bioengineering degree

"Bioengineering is a multidisciplinary area where the engineering sciences interface with biology, biomedical sciences, and medicine to advance human health," says Clemson bioengineering professor, Martine Laberge.

Bioengineering brings together the understanding of biological systems through engineering analysis and experimentation. In addition, the application of engineering design and principals are used for the development of devices, processes, methods and biotechnology to improve medical practice and health care delivery.

Until this fall no other South Carolinian schools offered bioengineering as an undergraduate degree. The bioengineering program at Clemson began in 1963 with the inception of a Ph.D. program. A master's program was added in 1966.

Students who choose the bioengineering degree do so to be of service to their communities, for the excitement of working with living systems and for the chance to apply advanced technology to the complex problems of medical care.

Bioengineers may be called upon to design instruments and devices. They may also compile knowledge from many sources to develop new procedures or carry out research to solve new problems. Bioengineers are employed in industry, research facilities, hospitals, academia and regulatory agencies.

According to the U.S. government's new long-range forecast, the number of bioengineering jobs will increase 26.1% by 2012.

Since 2002 initiatives fostered by the South Carolina legislature, such as the Infrastructure Act, the Centers of Economic Excellence, and Innovation Act, have provided tremendous opportunities and incentives for economic development in bioengineering. These businesses will need employees with knowledge and skills to ensure their competitiveness. Clemson University is committed to producing graduates who can fill these jobs with a unique undergraduate bioengineering training program.

new science & technology in society classes

As Clemson continues to climb to the top of the charts, the University is also leading the way with its innovative Science and Technology in Society program. The program is now a part of general education requirements. STS classes discuss critically and ethically important issues linking science and technology with society. Students explore topics that include the evolution/creationism controversy, global warming, cloning, and stem cell research to earn a better understanding of how developments in the scientific world are affecting society.

Dr. Jerry Waldvogel, professor of several STS courses, feels that the program is a "valuable addition to the general education curriculum, because modern society is so intimately linked to science and technology, and there is a growing illiteracy about science in our society that needs to be corrected."

Through utilizing debates, hearing guest speakers, writing synthetic analysis papers, and creating reflective e-portfolios, students are challenged to think critically about what they are learning and how it relates to the discipline they are studying. Professors of these courses come from various fields across the University, and students taking the courses are as diversified as their teachers.

Pam Mack, director of the STS program, shared her vision for it. "We hope most of all that students will become better citizens, participating in public debate about issues of where our society is going and what technology we want, and making thoughtful choices as consumers as well."

These courses have benefits for professors as well. "For some of us, STS relates directly to our research, so we get a broader perspective on our research topics. For others, STS gives a chance to participate in educating the public better about what their field can contribute to public issues," Mack said.

Professor Thomas Oberdan agrees, "More than anything else, I hope my students develop the ability to grasp issues in the public sphere... so they can influence the direction in which science and technology develop."

honors College

The Honors College offers an assortment of programs to suit individual tastes of the honors students it supports. But for every individual, the Honors College is supportive and ready to give advice on internships, classes, fellowships, and other academic and life-related areas.

The Honors College offers study abroad opportunities in Brussels, Belgium as well as a service project in India over the summer. The Honors College offers The Duckenfield Scholarship to one lucky recipient to Oxford University in England over the summer that covers, tuition, room and board.

In addition to these amazing study abroad opportunities, the Honors College offers students incredible opportunities here on Clemson's campus. Students can pick up free tickets to select cultural events at the Brooks Center. Students can also apply to join an honors enrichment group known as Dixon Fellows where they participate in book discussions and other events such as dinner with the cast of a Shakespearian play during Clemson's Shakespeare festival.

EUREKA!

The Calhoun Honors College is experiencing exciting growth. The Honors College started the EUREKA! summer research program for freshman and rising sophomores in the Honors College, hired Ricki Shine as the new Director of Major Fellowships, and has a new vision for two types of honors programs.

Starting next fall, the Honors College will have a new approach to its honors program. Two types of programs will exist for students to choose from, because as Dr. Wainscott says, "There is not one typical cookie-cutter honors student."

The University Honors program will be for students focused on their major. The Calhoun Scholars program will be for students who have diverse interest in their majors, want to study abroad, do internships, co-op, or community service.

To meet this goal, the EUREKA! program was born. EUREKA! stands for Experiences in Undergraduate Research, Exploration, and Knowledge Advancement. The EUREKA! program is open to all majors and is not just focused on the hard sciences. Students are given a chance to diversify their research interests before they lock themselves into a specific major.

The EUREKA! program also hopes that it will help honors students be more competitive for national and international awards, such as the Goldwater Scholarship that looks for a student to have research experience by the time they are a sophomore.

Ricki Shine was recently hired by the Calhoun Honors College to meet the needs of an expanding area. Ricki Shine serves as the new Director of Major Fellowships for the Honors College. Her position is seen as a necessity in an ever more competitive environment that centers around national scholarships and fellowships. National scholarships and fellowships such as the Rhodes, Marshall, and Fulbright that give clout both to the student that receives them and to the school they attended.

What's it like to have one of your parents as a Clemson faculty member?

The Clemson Family: faculty and kids

Students are often surprised when they discover their classmate has Clemson faculty members for parents. To other students, after growing up here with their parents working at Clemson, it seems only natural to have professors as parents. According to Abby Culin, a food science major, "Since my dad has worked at Clemson for years and years, I grew up in this town. I would say for sure that is the biggest effect that his being a part of the faculty has had on my Clemson experience."

Most students with Clemson faculty members for parents were very positive about the experience. According to bioengineering major Exley McCormick, "I really enjoy having my dad here as a professor. It's nice to be able to drop by his office and see him whenever I want to. The only drawback is if I get in trouble, he always finds out. Sometimes it seems like he knows before I do." Omar Haque shared similar sentiments with Exley McCormick, "It has been nice going to school where my parents teach because I had some insight to how Clemson works and I am able to get things done easily when I need them. It's especially nice to be able to go talk to them when I have problems because they are right here. At first, I was a little unsure about going to school at the same university where my parents teach, but now I realize that it is more of a bonus."

Other students reflected on the benefits of having family close. study abroad

Study abroad is a program that offers students the chance to travel all over the world and experience new cultures, while receiving college credit. Clemson University students have the option of traveling to many countries. Some of these countries include Australia, China, New Zealand, and Africa. Study abroad is open to both undergraduate and graduate students who meet the academic standards and are interested. The curriculum vitae program is very accommodating to students, as it gives them many time periods to travel. While some students want to stay an entire school year, others have the option of staying for only one semester. Travel time is also open during the summer. Clemson University students also have the option of doing a short term study abroad during spring break.

No matter what program students choose, they are guaranteed to learn something, both in and out of the classroom. This is especially true for students who choose to study abroad during the summer and have the option of traveling under Clemson University faculty. These programs are setup by the professor. Students have the opportunity to bond with other Clemson students while taking classes and exploring new worlds and cultures.

However, students who do not go on faculty-led trips are not at a disadvantage. These students have many opportunities to see the countries they visit on their own time. They also take classes that are typically geared towards their major.

When students return to Clemson University, they are able to encourage others to study abroad. These students have increased global awareness, international relations, new friends, and experiences that they will remember for a lifetime.

Academic Success Center
on the road to the top 20

Studying is an activity all students have to do in order to be successful academically. Many students, however do not know the proper studying techniques. The Academic Success Center helps students improve their studying habits. The Academic Success Center offers academic workshops, tutoring and an award-winning Supplemental Instruction program.

Recently, Clemson's Supplemental Instruction program was acknowledged as the Outstanding Supplemental Instruction Program during the Fourth International Conference on Supplemental Instruction in Sweden. Supplemental Instruction, SI, is an innovative approach to learning. It is a peer-led study session. In order to qualify to be an SI leader a student must have made an 'A' in the course where they will lead study sessions. The reason students working in SI are referred to as leaders instead of instructors or tutors is to emphasize that they are there to facilitate peer tutoring and not re-hash lectures that the students have already heard in class. SI is offered in traditionally difficult classes such as Chemistry 101 and 102.

The Academic Success Center is also responsible for CU 101, a course recommended for freshman students so that they can learn proper studying techniques. One of the studying techniques championed by the Academic Success Center is to not simply to memorize course material, but to use other techniques, such as mnemonics, to remember the material. CU 101 students also learn about Clemson University through various activities, including, very often, a tour of Tillman Hall's clock tower.

The Academic Success Center also offers tutoring. Tutoring sessions are held all over campus and expand the class offering found in SI sessions. For example, students can receive tutoring in economics but there are no supplemental instruction courses offered. Tutoring is for classes that are difficult, but do not have the high withdrawal, 'D' and 'F' rate associated with SI course.

career center

The Career Center gives Clemson students the opportunity to succeed in the job world. From workshops to personal career counseling the Career Center is ready to help open doors for all of Clemson's exceptional students.

So, what are you going to do when you get out of school? To many college students this simple question can instill fear and the usual, "I don't know," answer. Although this may be a tough question to answer, Clemson's Michelin Career Center is trying to make the decision a little easier one student at a time.

The Michelin Career Center offers students many services such as internships, career workshops, on-campus interviewing, and Experiential Education. The main goal of the Career Center is to provide all Clemson students with the opportunity to identify, plan and eventually succeed at reaching their career goals.

The Career Center assists students through the entire process of attaining a career. From the first day students walk on campus as freshmen, to the day seniors receive their diploma the Career Center's services are available. They offer valuable answers to a student's most daunting questions.

The Career Center can help you choose a major, write an effective resume, find an internship and even land you a full-time job. The Career Center provides one-on-one advising and many workshops designed to enhance students marketability and ultimately get them a job after graduation. The Career Center is available to any Clemson student, undergraduate and graduate students alike – even alumni can benefit from the Career Center's services.

The Career Center is a resource that is unique and extremely helpful to all students. It provides answers to many questions students may have and allows for an interface with many potential employers. The Career Center is here for Clemson students and will allow them all to be able to answer any question about their future.

1 Decisions, Decisions

A student looks through informational packets provided at the Fall Career Fair sponsored by the Michelin Career Center. The Career Fair is held twice a school year and allows students to learn about various careers and employment opportunities that they never would have thought about before. The Career Fair is a three-day event that provides students with essential knowledge and career options that will help them in life after graduation.

summer reading

When the Class of 2010 gathered in Littlejohn Coliseum this August, few among them knew of the controversy that had been discussed behind the scenes. In fact, it seems few of those students who read the book found Ann Patchett's Truth and Beauty: A Friendship controversial at all. It was apparent that something was severely wrong, however, the moment Ms. Patchett began to speak. It was assumed that she would spend her time reflecting upon her book and the life of her close friend, the late Lucy Grealy; she did this to a certain extent, discussing the events that led to Lucy's addictions and untimely death. She also discussed her marriage to her close friend Karl, the origins of the book's title, and changes that have occurred in her own life since Lucy's death.

A COMPELLING READ

The Summer Reading Selection for 2006 was Ann Patchett's Truth and Beauty: A Friendship, both a touching memoir and a vivid account of the pain felt by a young woman and how her friendship with the author helped both of them live life to its fullest. It is not about one single person's life, as much as what the title of the book suggests: a friendship; a friendship between two young women who became close friends and helped each other through the extraordinary and extraordinarily difficult times in their lives. Though the ethicality of the book was debated before the convocation, it was ultimately decided by President Barker to uphold the decision of the selection committee and allow the book to be used for the assignment.

The Author

"I hope that a civil intellectual discussion of the book, respectful of both the author and her critics, will be the outcome of this year's freshman reading experience for all. That is our goal always."

James F. Barker
President

"I sort of liked it. I do not want all of the guys to think 'He liked that?' though. I enjoyed parts of it, but overall the faculty needs to pick a book for guys too."

4 The Freshmen

However, Ms. Patchett used a large portion of her allotted time as a means of refuting her critics. Nevertheless, it was a well-written speech and many thought that she did a wonderful job.

It was during the question and answer period following Ms. Patchett's speech, however, that she began to show her true personality, which was one that shocked some as being completely different than what they saw while reading the book itself. The questions provided by the students were both thought-provoking and insightful, some even considered offensive. In the wake of the speech, several student groups were created on the Web site Facebook.com regarding questions that had been posed to the author and their respective questioners.

All things considered, the freshman reading and convocation did exactly what it was intended to do: unite the entering freshman class and give them something to ponder and discuss over the course of the year.

The College of Art, Architecture, and Humanities is a very diverse program and unlike any found elsewhere in the world. Students in this college are immersed in both the practical and abstract activities of the human mind.

With degrees ranging from history to construction science management, students are given the opportunity to broaden their intellectual horizons. These degrees, supplemented with study abroad opportunities and internships, provide students with a wide range of knowledge and hands-on experiences.

Specifically, Clemson's architecture program is one of the most competitive in the United States. Offering both undergraduate and Masters programs, Clemson architecture is also one of only two programs in the nation that offers a specialized degree in architecture and health.

The construction science management degree prepares students for the largest single industry-construction in the nation. Clemson's CSM degree boasts a 95 percent placement rate for graduating students.

Ceramics

Ceramic works from legendary artists Val Cushing, John Gill, Tony Hepburn, Wayne Higby, Bill Parry, Ted Randall, Don Reitz, Daniel Rhodes, and Robert Turner were on display at the Lee Gallery from August 14 - September 29, 2006. Henry Bauer has been renting and repairing the homes of and building studios for these artists in exchange for their work for the past 25 years. Most of Bauer's collection comes from Alfred, NY where the artists lived and were educated at Alfred University. The Henry Bauer Collection is now considered one of the most important ceramic collections in the country. The Lee Gallery was honored to have such a significant selection of works exhibited. This display showed the students of Clemson University and Lee Gallery's visitors the wide scope of artistry. It was meant to inspire Clemson's art students to try new forms of art. The Henry Bauer Collection will undoubtedly make a lasting impression on the University and the public.

Design-Build

The nationally held Design-Build Competition was hosted by the ASC/AGC with each region's initial competition sponsored by local contractors. The winning teams from each region went on to compete in the national competition. Details about the project were released two weeks prior to the competition and the specifics were released at its commencement. The projects were chosen by the contractor who sponsors each division and is usually a project which he or she has actually completed. The project that the six AAH students had to complete on the regional level was a higher education dormitory.

This competition is a 13 hour process which begins when each team is given a request for proposal outlining the requirements and specifics of the project. Each team then gets a few hours for a pre-bid meeting to answer questions. The team then produces a design with floor plans, elevations, site plan, a project schedule, etc. Finally the team members prepare a 15 minute presentation for the judges. "I think the biggest experience learned in the competition was getting everyone to work together efficiently. It takes a lot of coordination to be able to get six people with different background to work toward a common goal and produce an 80 page document in 13 hours!" said Jessica Latour, senior architecture and construction science major.

The team of Tristan Cunio, Cody Albergotti, Francesco Cardella, Colin Baker, Jill Hazel, and Jessica Latour won the first place overall, best presentation in the regional competition, and placed third nationally.

Clemson University hosted the 8th Annual International Writing Across the Curriculum (WAC) Conference May 18-20, 2006. Clemson was osen to host the 2006 WAC Conference by a board of advisors comprised of previous conference directors, representing institutions including ornell, Indiana, Missouri, Purdue, and Rice. More than 450 individuals devoted to education and research from 42 states and 15 countries thered at the Madren Center to learn how to advance students' communication skills and effectively involve faculty in interactive learning.

Founded by Dr. Art Young in 1989, the Clemson University WAC program seeks to cultivate the essential tools of communication required in rld today. Through frequent practice and delivery to different audiences under a variety of contexts, a student's writing and speaking skills n be developed and polished.

College of Agriculture, Forestry and Life Science

From the classrooms of Poole Agricultural Center to the labs of the Biosystems Research Complex, CAFLS students can be found all over campus learning and researching.

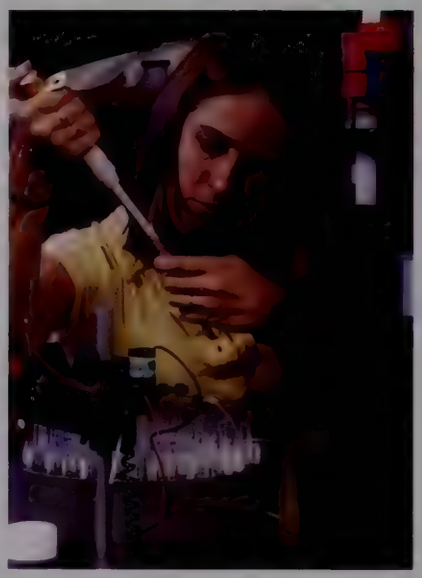
– Brittany Stademan

"I enjoy being in CAFLS because I know that I'm getting opportunities that nobody else is."
– Nina Gonzalez

The College of Agriculture, Forestry, and Life Sciences (often known as CAFLS) houses over 2700 undergraduate and graduate students at Clemson. With nineteen majors from forest resource management to biological sciences, the college caters to numerous interests for its undergraduate students. CAFLS also offers seventeen Masters programs and thirteen Ph.D. programs.

The offices for the college are located in Barre Hall. Here faculty and staff work diligently to offer students the best experience possible, including seminars for preparing for graduate programs and professional schools, as well as producing industry-ready graduates. The college organizes a career fair each semester for its current students that brings in employers specific to the fields of study within the college.

The college also offers many partnerships with outside facilities and companies. Graduate students can complete research in human genetics at the Greenwood Genetics [illegible] studying alongside its physicians and scientists. The faculty at Clemson works closely with the GGC to direct this research. CAFLS also maintains partnerships with Sonoco Products Company and Cryovac; both companies frequently hire Clemson undergraduates for co-ops and internships.



Students in the biosystems engineering department work hard both in the classroom and in the lab to further their education.

2 CAFLS also has many buildings on campus that do not have classrooms. The greenhouses are home to many of the plants that labs use for research

3 Students in majors that fall under the agriculture and life sciences part of the college have the opportunity to get hands on experience with animals

4 Students from CAFLS spend time both in the labs found on campus and in outdoor labs found in the surrounding communities.

Donation

The Sonoco Packaging Company has donated $2.5 million dollars to Clemson toward the creation of the Sonoco Institute of Packaging and Design. The money will, along with other private donations, be used for a building to house the Institute. Sonoco, a South Carolina-based company and one of the largest packaging science companies in the nation, has in the past worked with Clemson's Packaging Science program to establish the Sonoco Lab in Newman Hall.

The new institute will merge the naturally complimentary disciplines of Packaging Science and Graphic Design. Says Keith Barber, the CAFLS Senior Director of Development, "You're going to marry these two programs together, and ultimately produce society-ready graduates." This will allow the students of both majors to gain hands-on knowledge and experience of the machinery, tools and methods involved in packaging. The Institute will also create three new faculty positions.

Career Fair

The College of Agriculture, Forestry, and Life Sciences hosted its own Career Fair on October 4, 2006. The Career Fair featured 50 different employers all vying for the various majors from this college to fill job and internship openings. Employers from the local level like Emery's Tree Service, in addition to well-known national companies such as Perdue Farms and John Deere were present. Said Josh O'Rear, "The Career Fair has given me a good look at the diverse careers where I could work. I'm an Agriculture Economics major, but I could potentially work in the accounting department at one of these firms."

The internships and jobs at the CAFLS Career Fair benefit many students. Timothy Nafziger, an Entomology major, is an example of a student that gained great opportunities through a past career fair. Not only is Timothy a veteran of the Epcot Science Internship program, he returned to the Career Fair to share his experiences with fellow students. He studied biological control during his six-month internship for Disney, raising small wasps to kill other harmful pests. Timothy's internship experience allowed him to apply knowledge from his major. In addition to his internship, he was granted another opportunity by presenting the Epcot Science Internship to other students.

Creative Inq.

Creative Inquiry is a program at Clemson University that helps undergraduate students establish and develop critical thinking and communication skills, and gain a vast understanding of the research process. Creative inquiry projects span multiple semesters but the results and creations remain a part of Clemson University long after the participants have graduated. Projects usually involve design, research, service activities, and performing arts, just to name a few. The program aims to unite past discoveries with present ideas and use them to enhance the future.

For the 2006-2007 school year, there are six departments conducting multiple creative inquiry projects and studies. One project being done in the College of Agriculture, Forestry, and Life Sciences is the creation of the Certified Backyard Wildlife Habitat. This project is unique because of the interaction that it is promoting. The project is geared towards uniting undergraduate students, ranging from freshmen to seniors, with emeriti, thus creating something that will be a permanent fixture on Clemson's campus. The goal of the project is to create an environment for flowers and birds and every creature in between. It will also be a place for people to go and enjoy the scenery.

Completing the project will be quite a process. Fall of 2006 marks the beginning of the project. The projected completion date is May 2008. Over the next two years, students and emeriti will first plan the habitat, from location to the types of plants. Then, a boundary must be built, establishing the official location of the Backyard Habitat. Once the Certified Backyard Wildlife Habitat is completed, it will be the first structure of its kind on Clemson's campus.

The College of Business and Behavioral Sciences (CBBS) has almost 4,000 undergraduate and graduate students at Clemson. The college has thirteen undergraduate degrees ranging from accounting to graphic communications. This variety of majors caters to the numerous interests of its undergraduate students. CBBS also offers ten Masters programs and three Ph.D. programs.

The offices for CBBS are in Sirrine, Brackett, and Godfrey Halls. Here faculty and staff work diligently to offer students the best experience possible, from a quality education to centers used for preparing students for graduate programs.

The college works closely with a number of specialized centers. The Clemson Institute for the Study of Capitalism examines the political, ethical, economic, legal, and constitutional foundations of capitalism. The Renaissance Center in downtown Greenville allows graduate students to get hands-on entrepreneurial experience with local businesses. The Spiro Center for Entrepreneurial Leadership supports activities that promote economic and entrepreneurial advances at the local, regional, and national level. Finally, the Manufacturing Management Lab uses modern principles of manufacturing management, enterprise resource planning (ERP) software, team work and leadership to teach the most up-to-date principles to students.

New MBA

With the cost of health care on the rise, we need people looking out for the future financial status of the health care system. Two of Clemson's colleges are working together toward this goal. The College of Health, Education and Human Development (CHEHD) is lending a hand to the College of Business and Behavioral Sciences (CBBS) to include a new Health Services emphasis in their Masters' of Business Administration degree.

This degree hopes to focus on the issues that are of concern to the health care industry presently and in the future. All of the courses are offered through the University Center located in nearby Greenville, South Carolina. The courses are taught by faculty from Clemson University and focus mainly on the business side of medicine. However, students are also required to take some electives that introduce them more to the health care side of their degree as well such as Health Law and Ethics or Health Theory and Community Health.

Glow Ink

The Clemson University graphic communications department is continuously involved in research projects in the hopes of helping the printing industry. One project students were involved with during 2006 was research with glow-in-the-dark ink. The students worked on finding new ways to use glow-in-the-dark ink in advertising and other outlets. Currently the ink is used for exit signs, safety markers, and Halloween candy and costumes.

Glow ink achieves its glow effect through phosphors that are charged by light and glow in the dark. One of the challenges of the research was coming up with designs that would be pleasing in the light and dark, when the glow effect was not seen and when seen. One way the students tested the glowing effects of the ink was to create eye charts, printed at different conditions. They administered eye tests to several students in a darkroom to see which printing conditions provided the best glow effects.

The students also entered designs into a glow ink design competition. The winning design received $150 prize and the design was a great portfolio booster. The purpose of the contest was for students to design advertising materials for a real or fictitious company that implemented the use of glow ink. The research performed by the graphic communications department will benefit the printing and advertising industries. So, when you see a printed piece that glows, remember that Clemson had a part in making that possible.

Melissa Vogel

Melissa Vogel is a well-qualified first-year professor at Clemson in the sociology and anthropology department. She has spent twelve years in this field, concentrating mainly on architecture and ceramics. She has worked in various locations, such as Peru, Nicaragua, and Belize.

Melissa became interested in Anthropology at the age of ten. Her parents were always traveling around and brought her along with them. She says that her mother always made the family stop at Indian ruins as they traveled. When in Mexico, Melissa's interest in anthropology was sparked when she noted how amazing the Maya pyramids were. When she was a sophomore at UCLA, Melissa became an anthropology major, but it was not until her senior year that she began to do field work.

In 1996, Melissa took her first trip down to Peru to do field work. She enjoyed the work she did there, but decided to look at other places as well. She also traveled to Nicaragua and Belize to do work, but she returned to Peru because it was her favorite place. She said that Peru has the best preservation, since it is a desert land. Artifacts such as thread, wooden implements, ceramics, and hair could be found here. For Melissa, the most interesting things that she has found are ceramic molds. They tell a lot about the culture of the people that lived there previously. She still goes to Peru every summer, when it is winter there to continue doing field work.

Melissa now teaches at Clemson in the sociology and anthropology department. She chose Clemson because she felt that she was wanted here. She is helping the department expand, which is a great opportunity for a first-year professor. In the classroom, Melissa prefers her students to interact and work together in small groups. The physical classroom setup, however, hinders the ease in which groups can work together. There are interactive CDs that her students use to create an electronic excavation site, teaching them how to dig for artifacts. Melissa Vogel is working hard to expand her department, teaching the students all that she has learned in her years out in the field. By continuing to travel to Peru for work in the summer, she will be able to acquire and maintain more knowledge, which can be passed on to her students.

College of Engineering and Science

With five programs ranked among the top 50 in the nation and eight programs accredited by the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology, Clemson's Engineering and Science program is considered to be among the best in the country.

–Nathan Kwan

Engineering and science is not for the meek and faint of heart.
–Robert Clarke

A total of 3,550 undergraduates and 1,102 graduate students filled the College of Engineering and Science in 2005, and those numbers have only increased. With three student programs, an entirely new bioengineering degree launching this year, one of the only comprehensive freshman engineering programs in the country and multiple opportunities for undergraduate and graduate research, Clemson University's Engineering and Science program is undoubtedly ranked among the best in the country.

Student programs in the college include RISE, WISE, and PEER. RISE, or Residence in Science and Engineering, is a program that gives freshman engineering students the opportunity to live and learn together, while at the same time easing the transition into college life and enhancing the academic experience with a network of supportive individuals. WISE, or Women in Science and Engineering, is a program that prepares women for successful careers in engineering and science by connecting them with tutors, advisors and academic opportunities such as study groups and workshops. PEER, or Programs from Education Enrichment and Retention, helps minority CES freshmen with the transition to college life by pairing them with minority upperclassmen who will serve as mentors to them throughout the year. The program has helped Clemson's minority graduation rates to exceed the national average. Clemson's General Engineering program is one of the few in the country that gives such specialized attention to freshmen engineers.

Tick Tock

Clemson University President P.H. Mell purchased a Seth Thomas Model 16B Graham Escapement clock in the summer of 1905. It was installed in Tillman Hall by early 1906. The clock lived in Tillman Hall for nearly eight decades before it was retired and put into storage in 1985.

Restoration of "Old Tillman clock" was first initiated by Gene Volk, a member of the National Association of Watch and Clock Collectors. John Finn, the CES director for administration and external relations, along with Volk's colleagues from NWACC, and Cecil Huey, a professor of mechanical engineering here at Clemson were able to lend a helping hand to restore "Old Tillman clock." These men did come across some problems during the restoration that usually involved missing parts. These problems were easily solved when Clemson artisans at machining and technical services fabricated missing or damaged parts.

Almost a hundred years since the time of its arrival here at Clemson, the clock works just as well as it did back when it was new. "Old Tillman clock" is now located in the lobby of the Flour Daniel Building.

Quantum Dots

The Chemistry Department and Clemson University both have something to be excited about. A team of researchers led by Dr. Ya-Ping Sun announced in an article published in the Journal of the American Chemistry Society that they have discovered a way to create quantum dots with carbon. News of this breakthrough has received considerable attention from both the scholarly community and private industry. Researchers have already determined that when certain materials are reduced to an extremely tiny scale- less than 10 nanometers- they behave very differently. These quantum dots, as they are called, have already generated considerable interest in their potential. Unfortunately, previous dots were created from metals such as cadmium, making them toxic and expensive. Dr. Sun has demonstrated that the dots can be made from carbon, which is abundant and non-toxic. The dots can be coated with organic materials to make them essentially a specialized luminescent dye. Not only could the quantum dots serve as sensors, detecting explosive devices, biological weapons, or even cancer cells, they potentially lead to the creation of more efficient light sources. Said Dr. Sun, "We're onto something that will potentially benefit mankind." While the practical applications are numerous and several members of the business community have already indicated interest, Dr. Sun is equally excited about the potential of this discovery to advance scientific knowledge of material properties. Dr. Sun believes this area of research will be fruitful for some time to come, saying, "When I retire, I'll be at the tail end of doing this stuff."

Esin Gulari

Each faculty member at Clemson University brings something unique to their college and the University, and Dr. Esin Gulari, the new Dean of the College of Engineering and Science, is no exception. When Provost Dori Helms was asked about what Dean Gulari brings to Clemson she replied, "Dean Esin Gulari brings a fresh sense of excitement, 21st century vision and a highly competitive spirit to Clemson's College of Engineering and Science. Her appreciation and deep understanding of the benefits of collaboration will enhance educational experiences for our students and fuel economic growth for South Carolina."

Dr. Gulari was honored with a Fulbright Scholarship and holds a B.S. degree from Robert College in Istanbul, Turkey, and M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the California Institute of Technology, all in chemical engineering. She spent two years as a postdoctoral fellow at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. Dr. Gulari joined the chemical engineering and materials science (CHEMS) department faculty at Wayne State University in 1979, serving as chair of the department from 1993 to 2000. She was also the chief technology officer of nanoSEC, a startup company formed to manufacture and market nanocomposites produced using super critical fluid processing.

In addition to her career, Dr. Gulari is involved in several professional organizations. She is a fellow of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, a past member of the National Research Council and a member of the executive board of the Committee of the Advancement of Women Chemists and Chemical Engineers (Coach). She has also been very involved at the National Science Foundation (NSF), serving as the director of the Chemical and Transport Systems Division in the Engineering Directorate and acting assistant director for the Engineering Directorate. She is also a member of Advisory Committees at Purdue University and the University of South Carolina. Dr. Gulari was named Dean of the College of Engineering and Science at Clemson University on July 10, 2006 and the College is excited about the direction it will head in under her leadership.

The college of Health, Education and Human Development has over 2,100 undergraduate students currently enrolled. These undergraduates are also joined by over 1,000 graduate students. All of these students are taught by 150 faculty members. Undergraduate students in this college can choose from 32 different degrees, including education, teaching, health science, nursing, language and international health, and parks, recreation, and tourism managment. Graduate students can choose from degrees such as educational leadership or youth development.

Offices and the classes are located in Edwards hall, with classes in Edwards, Tillman and Lehotsky. The synonymity of location not only helps the faculty to see the students learning first hand, but also gives students easy access to faculty when they have problems or ideas. Students in the college of HEHD are also involved with the Joseph F. Sullivan Center. This center provides health services to and beyond Clemson's campus and community. The Sullivan Center teams up with students and faculty to assist the community in their well-being, using the mobile unit as a way to provide health care to the community.

Elementary and Secondary Education are some of the larger departments in CHEHD, with about 15% of the college's enrollment

The college also offers distance learning at the University Center in Greenville. The School of Nursing and the Eugene T. Moore School of Education offer graduate courses through the center. This helps students who want a Clemson education become involved in the curriculum without necessarily attending the university.

The Clemson University Student Nurses Association (SNA) participated in the CHEHD Homecoming Fair. The Health, Education and Human Development Homecoming Event lasted from 10 AM to 12PM. It was held at the Carillon Gardens.

At the fair, the SNA provided free blood pressure and blood sugar screenings. The SNA also sold keychain masks that help with CPR.

People attending the Homecoming Fair also ate free food and enjoyed free refreshments while learning more about the CHEHD. There was even a play area for children there.

According to Kelly Boyd, a nursing major, "The HEHD Homecoming Fair is always a great experience to interact with HEHD alumni as well as members of the Clemson family. It's also a great time to practice our skills and provide education about specific health conditions."

Nutrigenomics

Obesity is a growing problem in South Carolina and Clemson University recently received the approval to develop an endowed chair for nurtigenomics, a growing area of study that focuses on the interaction between peoples' diet and their genes. As Susan Barefoot, the chief operating officer of the Clemson Agricultural Experiment Station said in the press release announcing the chair, "we will focus on identifying and understanding the power of functional foods — foods or dietary inputs that may provide health benefits beyond basic nutrition." Functional food can be rolled oats, yogurt, or carrots, which contain beta-carotene. Beta-carotene is able to neutralize free radicals which may cause harmful damage to cells and is able to strengthen the cellular antioxidants of cells. The endowed chair would be able to head-up research groups, which would study the effects of functional foods on obesity; which in turn would be able to help the citizens of South Carolina live longer, healthier lives. The nutrigenomics endowed chair is part of an initiative by the South Carolina state legislature to bring top academic researchers into the state of the University of South Carolina, the Medical University of South Carolina, and, of course, Clemson University. The new endowed chair is yet another reason why Clemson is quickly rising in the ranks, on its way to being one of the top twenty schools in the nation.

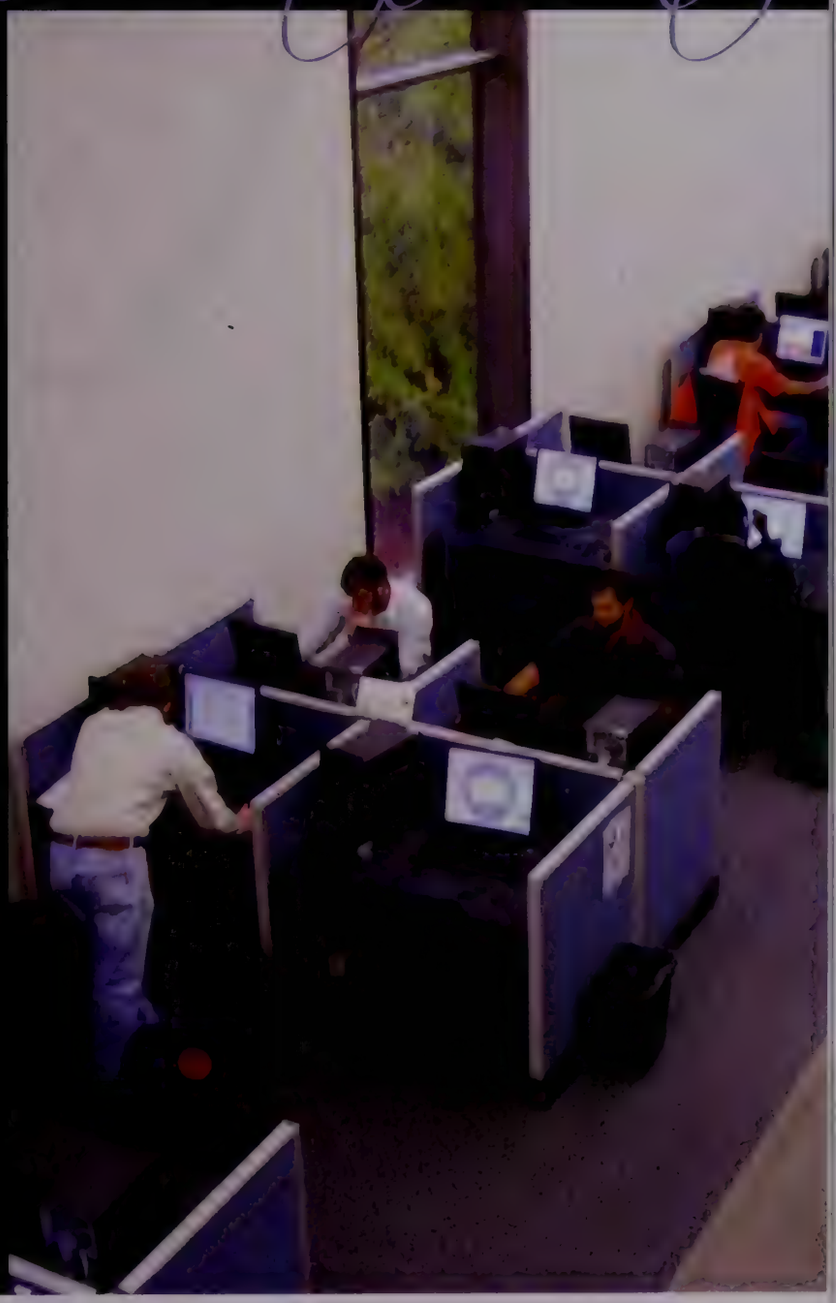
Houston Center



The Charles H. Houston Center for the Study of the Black Experience in Education seeks to examine African American's difference in educational achievement. The center conducts research and implements programs focused on identifying causes behind the achievement gap and various ways to eliminate the achievement difference.

One of the programs offered by the Charles H. Houston Center for the Study of the Black Experience in Education is called Faculty of the Future. It seeks to help graduate students develop the skills and political savvy necessary to land a job as a college faculty member. The Faculty Development Program is also run by the center. This program seeks to assist Clemson's African American faculty in education and social sciences. The goal of the program is to help these faculty members attain tenure and promotions as well as conduct and publish high-quality research. The center also works with elementary and secondary schools to help the schools design programs that better serve African American students and in turn the community at large.

focus on creative inquiry symposium

What happens when the Board of Trustees gives $1,000,000 to 200 faculty-led, student research teams? Creative Inquiry. Creative Inquiry is a program designed to guide undergraduates in all departments through research. Provost Dori Helms initiated the program by suggesting application of knowledge as the best learning tool. While most graduate programs focus on research, Clemson University is one of the few colleges and universities that gives its undergraduates the same opportunities.

In Creative Inquiry students choose a project and work with peers and faculty to research into the topic and draw conclusions. The topics range from obesity in schools to South Carolina coastal tourism to communication pedagogy. Results of the projects vary greatly as well. One team even traveled to Scotland to perform a play they created through research. Clemson University's goal is to have every student involved in at least one team during undergraduate studies.

Dr. Jeff Appling, head of the program, boasted about creative inquiry's career benefits for students, "It's a win-win situation. I can't think of a downside." Creative Inquiry teaches students to answer open-ended questions and focus on real problems. Participant Melissa Granger commented, "I learned much about professionalism and about presenting my ideas in a professional atmosphere."

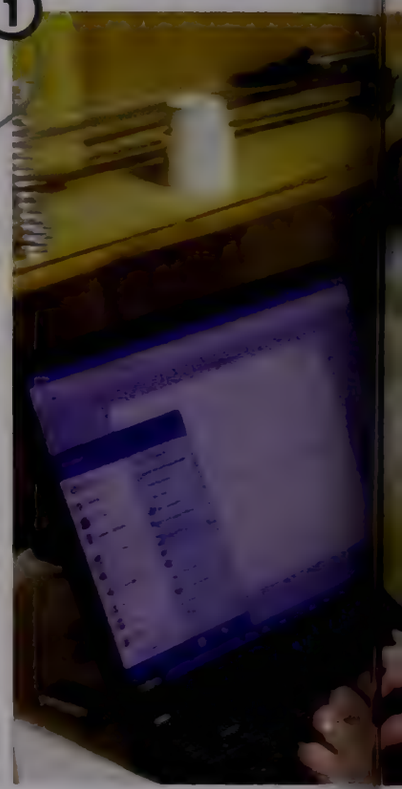
Experimenting with golf clubs



Molly Schroer, a senior in Mechanical Engineering, is spending a lot of time working with golf clubs and fishing rods for her departmental honors program. She is not playing golf or actually going fishing, but trying to help others understand the stiffness of a shaft with a relatively small diameter. Her research is focused on finding experimental methods to identify the stiffness of the shafts used in golf clubs and fishing poles.

Molly sets up the shafts on an apparatus where it is held on one side by clamps and remains untouched on the other side, and then attaches weights to the end of the shaft that is not attached to the table. With the weight applied, the shaft will bend different degrees, depending on the amount of weight tied to the shaft.

Molly then takes pictures of the shaft with the weight using a digital camera and loads the pictures onto MATLAB, a program designed to do calculations and configure data. By using pixel imaging and equations she can measure what the shaft looks like along all of its points and see how the shaft deflects the weight applied to it. After loading the pictures into the program, Molly gets to view many different graphs which show the shaft in different forms. The graphs help her gather the data needed and compare the different shafts and the different weights applied to the shafts. The material properties and dimensions of the shafts are unknown so the pictures and computer program are used to help determine how to measure the stiffness of the golf club shafts.

The stiffness of the shafts factor into the feel of a golf club to a person, and also effects how the club hits and shifts the ball. As for the fishing rods, the stiffness of the rod changes the way it casts, and how much weight can be on the end of it. This research can also be used in fatigue analysis to help companies who use shafts on equipment and medical implants such as artificial bones, and stabilizing pins understand the changes in the strength of the shafts before and after long term use. By figuring out the changes the shafts go through during long-term use, the manufacturers can determine where more material needs to be applied, and where they need to change the density and placement of other materials in the shaft. In addition, the experiment Molly is conducting can assist others in predicting the behavior of the shaft under known amounts of weight.

Molly's research is something she takes pride in and will hopefully lead her to finding the methods to identify the stiffness in the shafts with reliable precision. Her research can impact the way golf clubs and fishing rods are developed which would be an impressive accomplishment for her through her research.

webs we weave

Have you ever been walking along a trail through the forest and stumbled into a spider web? Usually your first response is to make sure you get as much of the web off of you, including the spider if it is there, as quickly as possible. But imagine one day using everyday objects made of fibrous material that were woven from synthetic spider silk fibers. That day may not be too far away.

Currently, many people wear clothing made from silkworm silk. However, spider silk has many more practical qualities than that of silkworms. The fibers used to form the dragline of spider silk are extremely elastic, durable, and biodegradable. For example, spider dragline silk has been shown to be stronger than steel and of about the same magnitude of Kevlar. These desirable characteristics make spider silk a prime candidate for use in novel fibers and films. However, spiders cannot be farmed for their silk like the silkworm, because spiders are inherently cannibalistic. So, several undergraduate and graduate students are currently working on a multi-disciplinary project to mass produce the spider silk-like fibers.

The Department of Genetics and Biochemistry is currently working on assembling a synthetic form of the spider silk gene. This synthetic gene would then be expressed in other systems besides spiders for mass production. The student researchers first must obtain the DNA sequence for the spider silk gene and then successfully clone the sequence into systems that will express the protein encoded by the gene. The systems currently being explored are bacterial, yeast, and tobacco. All of these systems would provide ways in which to mass produce the silk-like protein.

The School of Materials Science and Engineering will attempt to find a method of spinning the protein fibers that produces the most useful novel materials. Reconstructing the same setup that is used by the spiders to spin the protein would be ideal. They will also work on designing the best way to perform a large scale production of these synthetic silks.

One day in the near future as you're walking down that same trail and happen upon another spider web, you may still have the urge to wipe away the spider's web, but you may also be wearing a jacket or carrying a backpack made of these novel spider silk-like fibers.

Story and photos by Kristen Bieri

1 Undergraduate and graduate students across the University work diligently in order to successfully produce a synthetic fiber that can be used in practical ways.

2 Labs housed in Jordan Hall and the Biosystems Research Complex are where many of the researchers are working to produce the synthetic gene and express it in various biological systems.

3 Transgenic tobacco plants are just one of the systems that researchers hope to be able to mass produce the spider silk-like protein.

4 Spider webs come in all shapes and sizes and are made from many different types of silk. The silk that this research is looking to replicate is the dragline silk, with its extreme tensile strength and elasticity.

Dr. John Coggeshall is teaching, for the third semester, his Focus on Creative Inquiry anthropology course, which allows students to study the daily life of undergraduates here at Clemson. When his project began in the spring of 2006, his students produced papers on Greek life, which were peer-reviewed and presented at the South Carolina Anthropology Student Conference at USC Aiken.

The past two semesters have been devoted to freshmen women. Lauren Reis has done work on the adjustment period girls go through when coming to Clemson; while Katherine Bonner studies how out-of-state girls without social networks make friends at the University.

"The research these guys are doing is really modelling real-life research," Coggeshall said. He has been surprised at how his students face many of the same challenges and frustrations that actual anthropologists fa in their work. They must find ways of gaining access to the social workings they wish to study, collect data from subjects wh while willing, are not always helpful, consider the ethics of using information, and determine how to present that information papers. Bonner said that mining information from freshmen can be very difficult. She seeks the everyday information, such where they go, or what they watch on television, to which she often gets the vague response that her subjects are "just hangi out." "We aren't looking for anything extraordinary," she said.

Coggeshall is excited about providing documentation of Clemson student life from the present day, so that it may be compar to past students, such as the corps of cadets, the students of a newly integrated and coeducational Clemson, and also to futu students. "I think this gives us a window of description that can last for generations," he said.

In May, the Fifth Annual South Carolina Anthropology Student Conference will be held in Clemson, and Coggeshal students will again present their peer-reviewed papers. Coggeshall enjoys the opportunity for his students to gain experien in this endeavor, and so do they. Said Emily Estes, "I thought it was really cool to see what other people at other schools a working on."

rocket science

Clemson has its very own rocket scientists. CES undergraduate and graduate students under the leadership of Dr. Miguel Larsen completed a rocket launch from Poker Flat, Alaska in January 2007. The undergraduate physics students included Russell Hedden, junior; Bridget O'Donoghue, sophomore; Greg Twork, senior; Caroline Yount, senior; Tripp Collins, senior; Andrew Kelleher, senior; and Lucas Hurd, freshman. The undergraduate mechanical engineering students included Dusty Coleman, sophomore; Jonathan Howlette, senior; and Arpan Shah, senior. Dan Brown is the lone junior geology major. The remaining students on the team are all in graduate school: Phillip Martin, MS graduate student in computer engineering; Justin Ingersoll, MS graduate student in electrical engineering; and Tianyu Zhan, Ph.D. student in physics.

The JOULE II project sent four NASA rockets into the atmosphere. The project seeks more information about the electrical heating of the earth's thin upper atmosphere. Each rocket's flight lasted for approximately twelve minutes. The rockets were launched two at a time. One rocket measured the electrical currents within the aurora borealis and the second rocket released a chemical tracer made of trimethyl aluminum (TMA). The TMA violently reacts with atmospheric chemicals producing a trail visible to the unaided eye.

The visible chemical tracer was photographed by scientists in Poker Flat, Coldfoot, and Fort Yukon. Coldfoot and Fort Yukon are remote sites only accessible by plane during the winter. The photographs will be used to determine the dispersion of the TMA trail. The movement of the tracer allows the winds sixty to one hundred and twenty miles above the earth to be measured. Whereas the data from the chemical release rockets was visible from the ground, the rockets that read the electrical currents of the aurora sent the data collected via radio as they soared through the aurora.

no matter your age...

Death Valley has been called one of the "10 Toughest Places to Play Football" for one reason: the fans. Throughout the years, team after team has feared stepping onto the field at Death Valley, not only because of the strength of the Clemson football program but also because of the strength of its fans. Sports writer, Terence Moore of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution noted, "There is no place louder or more picturesque than Death Valley. There, where Clemson folks see magic in a hill and a rock, orange gets more respect than anywhere this side of Gainesville, Florida." Last year, together, orange painted bodies, purple and orange wigs alike, Clemson fans broke the record for loudest football stadium—reaching an astounding 126 dB—louder than a Boeing 747 taking off!

This year, Clemson fans have found new reason to demonstrate their spirit and creativity. At the beginning of the year, the Clemson soccer team played host to Maryland, the top-ranked team in the nation. In one of the most exciting soccer games Clemson has seen, 6,821 fans were packed both inside and out of Historic Riggs Field—becoming the second largest crowd in Clemson history! Fans brought the noise that they usually use to fill Death Valley and helped cheer the men's soccer team onto an astounding victory!

In another historic and exciting game in Clemson sports, twelfth-ranked Clemson football played host to lucky number thirteen, Georgia Tech, in one of the greatest homecoming games and ACC rivalry matches in the school's history. Early in the week, fans lined the street literally for days to ensure they got tickets to the game. Later in the week, fans were able to showcase a new kind of pride as ESPN GameDay showed up on Bowman Field to a mammoth crowd, hundreds of signs, and immense displays of spirit! The echo of the fans inside Death Valley could be heard for miles—the intensity of the fans and the excitement that filled the stadium helped lead the Tigers to an easy defeat over the Yellow Jackets.

Some students come to Clemson having been raised Tiger fans for life. Others develop their passion for the Tigers in the years they spend at the university. In either case, students attend Clemson University for four very short years but become Clemson fans for life. Stepping away from Clemson with a diploma, a student's blood no longer runs red, it forever runs ORANGE.

Although the official announcement was made less than a week prior to broadcast, Clemson students had been anticipating an ESPN College GameDay arrival for much longer. The upcoming Clemson versus Georgia Tech football game was exactly the type of match up that would gain widespread national attention. It was a Homecoming game. It was between two teams likely to compete for the ACC Championship title. ESPN producers agreed, and on October 16th students were formally notified that the GameDay show was to be aired live from Bowman Field from 10:00 AM to 12:00 PM.

The excitement throughout campus and the small town in the days leading up to the Home Depot-sponsored event was obvious. As the crew began to build the set, students began developing ideas that would ensure them an appearance on national television. The fall weather and approaching Halloween season inspired pumpkin football helmets, and elaborate face paint, colored hair, and personalized signs were equally as popular. From costume construction to sleeping on Bowman the night before the event to guarantee the perfect spot, students were eager to show America their Clemson spirit.

On Saturday morning, thousands of fans gathered to welcome Chris Fowler, Lee Corso, Kirk Herbstreit, and Desmond Howard to the set. In its 20 year existence (the first 7 of which the program did not travel to college campuses), the show had never before been hosted at Clemson. The broadcast featured highlights from Clemson football and many of the traditions and anniversaries celebrated on campus in 2006. The corner location next to Mell Hall, with a view of downtown, the Homecoming floats and Tillman hall, provided a unique GameDay setting.

Students began gathering on the field on Friday night in anticipation of long lines to get as close as possible to the front. By 10 AM, Bowman field was packed full of Clemson students and fans alike, as well as Clemson cheerleaders, Rally Cats, and TigerBand who were there to pump up the already anxious and excited crowd. The fans response to GameDay was phenomenal and Clemson became one of the largest crowds ever, prompting the GameDay hosts to test the infamous noise level of Clemson. The Clemson fans reached 112 decibels, drowning out the announcers on television.

Prior to the four hosts relocating to Death Valley to continue coverage of the actual game, each gave his infamous prediction of the game's result. Lee Corso said it best, placing a tiger mascot "head" over his own stating, "Clemson."

In High School, Didem Ece Led the Turkish Youth (under 18) National Team to a first-place finish in the 2004-05 in the European Qualifying Group. She played in the 2006 European Championships with the Turkish Junior (under 20) National Training Team. Her club team, the Eczacibasi Sports Club, was ranked first in the Istanbul Region from 2001-06 and earned a third-place finish at the Turkish Championships in 2005 . The club team claimed the Turkish Championships twice, earned two second-place finishes and placed third three times.

Sanders Koning who is originally from the Netherlands came to the US in order to play for the Clemson Tigers. In 2004-05, Sander Koning had 71 career singles wins, which is more than any other active Tiger Tennis player here at Clemson. He finished with a record of 21-10 for his single matches and a 7-3 mark in ACC play. He had a 44-25 record in sets played. Koning finished the year with a 5-2 mark in three-set matches and a 5-2 mark in tie breakers. He had an outstanding 14-2 mark in home matches and had a 5-1 record at number one singles. With his 16-9 record at number two singles and his 7-3 mark at number two singles against ACC competition, Sander Koning had a great season. He also had a doubles record of 20-11. He teamed up with Clement Reix at number two doubles and the pair had a 12-4 record overall. He also played doubles with Marko Cojanovic and Goran Sterijovski. He had a 13-12 overall record in 2001-2002. He posted a 5-3 in ACC play while competing twice at the number one position. Koning has had a very successful career here at Clemson.

Karolis Petrukonis is a freshman basketball player for the Clemson Tigers and is from Trakai, Lithuania. He was rated 87th in the nation and was also recuited by Virginia, Virginia Tech, Utah and Old Dominion. As a senior in high school, Petrukonis made the AllState in the private school division and averaged 16.5 points, 13.9 rebounds, and 5.1 blocks per game. In the summer of 2005, he played in the 19 and under Nike World Juniors in France and earned all tournament honors. Petrukonis was very successful in his native country and now has the chance to succeed in America as a Tiger.

Maria Brito's favorite quote is "actions speak louder than words." She believes this because when you are on the tennis court the only way you are going to win the match is if you play your hardest and do whatever it takes. Maria Brito hails from Mexico City, Mexico and has come all the way to Clemson to play for the Women's Tennis Team. Before she became a Tiger, Maria Brito was top-two ranked junior (16's) and top-four ranked junior (18's) in Mexico and was also ranked 48th in singles and 11th in doubles by the International Tennis Federation. She is a senior this year and has had a successful career in the NCAA. She is the record holder for the most wins in doubles and three-set singles here at Clemson. In 2005 Brito was named to the 2005 All-ACC Team and in 2004 she was ranked 100th by the ITA in the first singles poll. With all that Maria Brito has accomplished in her four years at Clemson, it is obvious that she has stayed true to her favorite quote and she has proven that her actions do speak louder than her words.

Senior, Frederico Moojen, transferred to Clemson from Lincoln Memorial University in Harrogate, Tennessee in the fall of 2004; however, he is originally from Balnearion, Brazil. He plays as a forward for the men's soccer team. In 2004 and 2005 he was named Gulf South Conference Player of the year and also named first team All-Conference for both seasons. In 2004, he scored 23 goals and had seven assists for 53 points. In the following year he scored 25 goals and had six assists for 56 points. Also in 2005, Frederico Moojen was a third team NSCAA All-American. Moojen was named the Player of the Year in the Premier Development league in 2006. In addition to all of these honors, he named to the National Soccer Coaches Association of America All-American Teams. Frederico Moojen is majoring in economics and will graduate at the end of 2007.

Frank Howard Field was named after Clemson's legendary football coach, Frank J. Howard. He was born and raised in Alabama. Howard was first introduced to football when he was in high school which proved to be a successful path for him. Frank Howard was such a talented young athlete and student that he was given a scholarship to attend the University of Alabama. Howard was a first string football player all four years he was a member of the Crimson Tide. After graduation, Howard made his way over to Clemson University where he first started off as a track and field coach in the year 1931. In addition to coaching track, Howard was also a baseball coach for the Tigers prior to getting involved with football here at Clemson. He held this position for thirty years before retiring after the 1969 season. Howard aquired 165 wins in his career as a football coach and because of this he has the 15th most wins of any college football coach. Frank Howard passed away January 26, 1996.

Walter Merritt Riggs played a very important role in Clemson history. He too was from Alabama, however, he attended Auburn University. He originally came to Clemson in 1896 as an assistant professor of mechanical and electrical engineering, but he was not limited to just the classroom. Riggs is mostly remembered for being the very first football coach to ever grace Clemson University's campus. Walter Riggs is the reason why orange and purple can be seen all over campus on any given day as well as the Clemson Tiger mascot. Riggs Field was originally built for the intentions of using it for football, but it has since changed sports. Not only was this field named after him, but Riggs Hall, which is a home to electrical and computer engineering, was also named after him. In addition to being Clemson's first football coach and trend setter, Riggs was also the university's fifth president in 1911. Riggs unexpectedly died in January 1924 when he was on a business trip to our nation's capital.

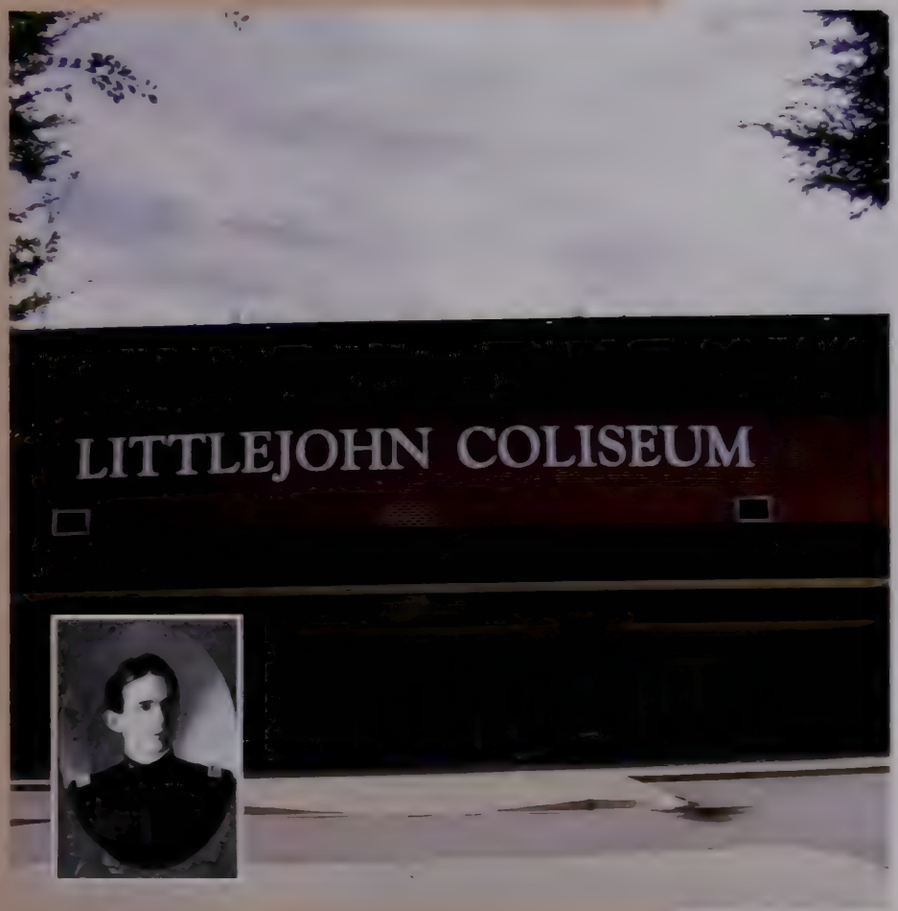
Doug Kingsmore Stadium was dedicated to Clemson Trustee, Harold Doug Kingsmore. Kingsmore came from Buffalo, South Carolina before stepping onto the campus of Clemson University in 1951. He graduated with the class of 1955. During his four year stay at Clemson University, Doug Kingsmore played varsity baseball. He was All-ACC and All-District III outfielder in 1954. Kingsmore became the first Clemson player in history to hit 10 home runs in a season. In addition, he led the ACC in home runs and runs scored in 1954 also. Kingsmore also led the Tigers in batting average (.371), slugging percentage (742) and RBIs (27). Doug Kingsmore Stadium was originally known as Tiger Field, but after Kingsmore donated a $1 million gift for renovations to be done on the baseball stadium in January 28, 2000.

James C. Littlejohn graduated from Clemson University in 1908 as an electrical engineering major. During his four years here, Littlejohn did not have the opportunity to make a lasting impression on the basketball court, but he did in the classroom. James Littlejohn was encouraged to stay involved with Clemson after graduation. With this advise, he became an electrician for the school. He eventually progressed to the position of registrar, and under the presidency of E.C. Sikes, he was appointed business manager. James Littlejohn held this position until his death. With his job as business manager, Littlejohn was able to help Clemson during its times of need. He was the one responsible for making sure that every employee at Clemson during the Depression received a paycheck. Even with his busy schedule of keeping Clemson financially afloat, Littlejohn was always able to stay in touch with the student body with his memberships to Tiger Brotherhood and Blue Key. Littlejohn dedicated over fifty years of his life to Clemson University before he passed away in 1959.



Walker Golf Course was named after Col. John E. Walker. Walker played football for the Clemson Tigers for three years before he graduated in 1926 with a B.S. in Engineering. After graduation Walker served in Panama, Alaska, and the China-Burma-India Theater during WWII. He was also the commanding officer of the 104th Infantry Regiment. Walker was awarded the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster and the Chinese Yun Hui Ribbon because of his bravery and dedication he showed during World War II. Col. John Walker's son, John Walker Jr., was responsible for naming and dedicating Clemson's golf course in honor of his father.

we are the top tigers

Clemson athletics are without question a prominent part of the Clemson experience. The enthusiasm, spi and dedication that Clemson students and fans alike show to the Tigers are part of what makes the teams successful. The 2006–2007 athletics season was full of its high points and unfortunately some not-so-good tim however support for the programs remained strong.

As always, Clemson football is the staple sport of the athletics program with over 80,000 fans every game cheering on t Tigers. The team started off the year strong with a 6-1 record before the much-anticipated Homecoming game against 13th rank Georgia Tech, the Tigers rallied to success decked out in the infamous all-purple dominating the Yellow Jackets 31-7 as ESP College GameDay celebrated around campus. After the game, the Tigers reached a top 10 ranking, a feat that led many fans hope for an ACC championship and entrance into the BCS. Unfortunately the success did not continue for the rest of the seas but the earlier excitement kept many fans loyal.

The Clemson golf program is also one of the best in the nation, finishing seventh at the NCAA Championships in 2006 a signing two of the top 10 junior players in the nation. Swimming and diving, both men's and women's, finished fifth at the A Championships in 2007 breaking numerous personal, team, and ACC records. Men's tennis is ranked in the top 25 teams, wh women's tennis reached top 10 for the first time since 2005 in March. The Tigers indoor track and field placed 15th in the NC Indoor Track and Field Championships. Travis Padgett won the national title in the 60m dash and Jacoby Ford placed 3rd. Clemson soccer once again proved to be another exciting sport for Tiger enthusiasts, advancing to the NCAA Final 16 a finishing the season in the top 15, although the men's soccer team reached first place in some polls throughout the year. Women's soccer also delivered success, finishing top 15.

Men's basketball was perhaps the most surprising of all Clemson teams, starting the season as the only men's NCAA team to go 17-0, ultimately reaching top 15 in the USA Today/ESPN poll, and nearly that in the AP Top 25 poll. Also, as usual baseball started off the 2007 year strong, with a first place ranking.

ctober. Homecoming. ESPN's College Game Day: live from Clemson. This year's mid-season match-up with the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets was one of the most anticipated games of the season, with a top-10 ranking in the polls on the line. The air was clear, crisp, and calm—perfect weather for a nighttime clash between ACC rivals. Clemson fans packed Death Valley and received their purple-clad Tigers with deafening enthusiasm and cheered on their team with equal spirit throughout the game.

After five straight victories, the Tigers carried momentum which was only bolstered by playing on their home field, in front of thousands of their biggest supporters, who crowded Memorial Stadium in Clemson orange. The Clemson defense shut down Georgia Tech's biggest threats, Reggie Ball and Calvin Johnson, holding Johnson to a single carry, which resulted in a loss of yards. The Yellow Jackets scored a touchdown at the beginning of the fourth quarter, but the Tigers quickly answered with a touchdown of their own. Clemson's offense also ruled the playing field, leading Georgia Tech 7-0 at the half and 17-0 at the end of the third quarter, with a final score of 31-7. Running backs James Davis and C.J. Spiller each scored two touchdowns, and kicker Jad Dean nailed all four point-after attempts and a field goal. Spiller used a 50-yard run and a 50-yard pass from Will Proctor to gain his two touchdowns, and Davis converted on two long drives by the Tiger offense. The Tigers dominated the game with 321 rushing yards to Georgia Tech's 88 yards, and 426 yards of total offense to the Yellow Jackets' 205 yards.

Tiger fans were not disappointed by this year's showdown in Death Valley with the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets. With the victory, the Tigers advanced to 4-1 in conference play and 7-1 overall. Clemson was rewarded with a ranking of 10th nationally following this win over the 13th ranked Yellow Jackets.

At a press conference prior to the Music City Bowl, Tommy Bowde mentioned "I know Kentucky is excited after not going to a bowl game i seven years. So I have told my team they will have great enthusiasm at th beginning of the game. We will have to be ready for them from the start." The Tigers wer ready for the Wildcats at the beginning of the game, but somehow let them slip away as th game progressed.

The Tigers just started off on the wrong foot when it came to the Music City Bo game. Three days prior to the game against the University of Kentucky, Clemson's defensiv back, Duane Coleman, was arrested and charged with simple possession of marijuana o Wednesday, December 27, 2006. This suspended him from the bowl game. At the Music Cit Bowl game the Wildcats' early lead forced the Tigers, one of the country's best rushin teams, into a passing situation. Clemson's running backs James Davis and C.J. Spiller wer only able to gain 77 yards between the two of them. C.J. Spiller needed 86 yards in orde to be the first player in the school's history with 1,000 rushing yards, but he was unable t accomplish this record-breaking feat.

The Wildcats stunned the Tigers as Andre Wilson threw three touchdowns and 300 yar while Woodson completed 20 out of 30 passes to finish his breakout season with a total of 5 touchdowns. The Wildcats unexpected defense held a 4-2 turnover advantage and held th Tiger offense back to six points until the final seven minutes of the game. The final score o this game was 28-20, the Wildcats. This was Kentucky's first bowl appearance since the 199 season and their first post-season win in 22 years. Clemson, on the other hand, had thei 18th bowl appearance since 1985 and had not ended their season in defeat in three years.

After last year's decision by the ACC to determine a conference champion by the outcome of the regular season and not by a conference championship match, the Tiger volleyball team knew how important each game of the 2006 season was. With 11 returning players and 4 freshman with notable high school statistics, the team had the necessary makeup to remain near the top of the conference, and they did. By the end of the season, the 3rd-ranked Tigers had a 20-10 overall record (15-7 in the ACC) and 13 sweeps over teams including FSU, Wake Forest, Georgia Tech, Boston College, and the 2005 Champion, North Carolina. Trailing only 1 Virginia and 2 Duke, the volleyball team maintained a strong presence on the court through the final games of the season.

Sophomore Danielle Hepburn, who set a record for number of blocks in a season her freshman year, continued to be a threat from the middle hitter position and was named ACC Volleyball Player of the Week on October 16th with a hitting percentage of .547. Jeanette Abbott also had a successful hitting season, averaging 4.65 kills per game. Star freshman libero Didem Ege helped lead the Tigers defensively, and as of November 5th, she was within 15 saves of beating the current Clemson freshman save record of 31.

Representing Clemson on the All-ACC teams were four starting players—Jeanette Abbott, Danielle Hepburn, Didem Ege, and Kelsey Murphy. Jeanette Abbott and Danielle Hepburn were selected to the honorable First Team of the ACC groupings, the first time since 1999 that Clemson has had multiple players chosen for the team.

Each of the starters, and several other players, had career noteworthy seasons; and it is this fact that led the team to even more successes than in the fall of 2005.

At Clemson, rowing is a group of dedicated students from freshmen to seniors. The team is composed of two different teams: novice and varsity. The novice team is composed of rowers on the beginner level, while the varsity team is made up of athletes who have become conditioned in the sport of rowing. This past spring season, the team competed against schools such as Boston College and the University of Southern California. The final race of last spring's season was also tied with the honoring of two athletes. Sarah Cooper and Jaclyn Rath received the honor of being added to the All American ACC Team. With the help of these athletes, the team finished their spring season placing eighth among the South Region schools.

This fall, the varsity 8+ team finished 14th in their final regatta of the 2006 fall season. The novice team finished second in their 8+ race with a time of 15:05.08. Such impressive times are due to the girls rigorous workout routine. They train year-round, in and out of the gym. This paid off this past season as the team was able to finish fourth out of 22 teams in the Head of the Hooch regatta.

The rigourous workout routine is made possible by the boathouse. The boathouse gives the team a place to practice in their short offseason. While here, they practice out of water techniques, such as maintaining stamina and mental focus during the last 500 meters of the race which are said to be the toughest.

Clemson's rowing team is composed of many girls who use their mental focus both in and out of the classroom. They use their mental strength to drive them through 5 am practices and two seasons a school year. Many of the girls are even involved in some of the most difficult majors Clemson has to offer. Their sacrifice is very admirable. Let's hope that the team can keep up the good work as the next season approaches.

cross country

Running just as fast as they can is exactly what members of the men's and women's cross country teams do for their sport. The men's team is coached by Bob Pollock and the women's team is coached by Marcia Noad. These very talented runners, with the help from their coaches have had much success in the fall season of 2006.

The men's cross country team competed in five meets this season and kicked it off with a first place finish here at home for the Clemson Invitational. For their next meet the Tigers had to travel to Louisville, Kentucky for the Louisville Classic. The men's cross country team finished fifth on this course which will later in the season be the site of the NCAA Southeast Regional. Their following race was the Pre-NCAA Championships in Terre Haute, Indiana. The Tigers placed 21st out of 36 teams. The Clemson Tigers as a team took Fifth at ACC Cross Country Championships while their teammate, Itay Magidi, broke the Panorama Farms course record and won the individual crown at this very important meet. The Tigers last and final meet took them back to Louisville, Kentucky for the NCAA Southeast Regional meet. Just like their previous meet the men's cross country team finished in fifth place. Bob Pollock was very pleased with his team's performance throughout the season.

Unlike the men's cross country team the women's team had a total of seven meets this season. The first meet they competed in was the Gamecock invitational where they finished fourth. The Lady Tigers managed to place sixth in the Lou Onesty Invitational in Charlottesville, Virginia and also the Furman Cross Country Invitational. At the Gardner-Webb Duels the Tigers took fifth place. At the Great American Cross Country Festival the Tigers tied for fourth place along with Samford and South Carolina. Also, the women's cross country team finished 11th at the ACC Championships, which were held at Panorama Farms near the University of Virginia. The team concluded the 2006 season with a 22nd-place finish out of 32 squads at the NCAA Southeast Regional at E.C. "Tom" Sawyer Park in Louisville, Kentucky. This season the team was lead by three very strong runners, Sunday Ford, Patrice McMillian, and Emma Laughlin.

Both men and women teams started their indoor track seasons with the Clemson Invitational where the women placed fourth overall and the men placed first. Clemson Men's Swimming and Diving finished the regular season 9-3 and 4-3 in the ACC

The only way to get this season started is to go ahead and dive into the water, and that is exactly what our Tigers did. Unfortunately, the Men's Swimming and Diving team had a rough start at their first meet of the season. The location of this meet was in Tallahassee, Florida, where they competed against Florida State. The team was not able to swim away with a win from this meet, but they recovered their loses at the Georgia Tech Aquatic Center in Atlanta. Here they competed against Georgia Tech and Boston College in a medley meet. They defeated Georgia Tech with a final score of 164-134. At the Virginia Aquatic and Fitness Center in Charlottesville, Virginia, they swam against and beat Virginia Tech and Penn State, but lost to Virginia. Next, the Tigers traveled down to Columbia for a meet against the Gamecocks. The Men's Swimming and Diving team won this with a final score of 150-148. During this meet the team was led by junior Attila Ruszka who collected three wins and a second place finish. The Clemson Tigers competed in the Nike Cup Invitational that took place over the course of three days in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. They placed third over all in this invitational. To start off a new year and the second half of their season the Men's Swimming and Diving team took a training trip to the Florida Atlantic Pool in Boca Raton, FL. Here they had the opportunity to scrimmage Florida Atlantic University, Missouri State, and Rice. The Men's Swimming and Diving team will compete in the ACC Championship in late February and the NCAA Championship in late March.

The Clemson Tigers have won numerous meets against many ACC and NCAA schools throughout the 2006-2007 season, but it will be an added bonus to be able to finish their season with four consecutive home meets prior to going the championships. Head coach Christopher Id and head diving coach Leslie Hasselbach foresee great things to happen at the ACC and NCAA championships. After having such a solid season the Men's Swimming and Diving team is expected to be ranked with the best of the teams for its final ranking.

As the Lady Tigers began their swim and dive season, everyone took notice as they captured notable wins against Georgia Tech, Boston College, and Miami. In Solid Orange fashion, the Lady Tigers were also able to secure a win against their formidable rivals, the Gamecocks. This season saw many impressive individual performances among the team's sophomores. In the 1650 Freestyle, Cassy LaRussa produced a time that makes her the sixth fastest Tiger ever in the event and also made a qualifying time for the NCAA Championship, which was held in Minneapolis, Minnesota this year. Another sophomore, Michelle Parkhurst, also performed successfully for the Tigers as she secured wins in both backstroke and freestyle events. The Tigers were also lead by veteran performances of senior Kallie Deters, who made impressive swims in short-distance freestyle. Collectively, the Tigers swam to a third place finish in the Nike Cup Invitational, held in Chapel Hill, beating other southern teams such as Kentucky and East Carolina. The Tigers also found success in the pool at the FAU Invite this season, held by Florida Atlantic University, where they came out on top over both the host school and Missouri State. Following a home stint at the end of their season, the Lady Tigers headed to Chapel Hill for the ACC Championship and later to the NCAA Finals, where they expected to perform well after a stellar season in the pool.

Unfortunately for the Tigers, both men and women will see many of their team's staples graduate at the end of the season this year. Anticipating this loss, Head Coach Christopher Ip signed seven new swimmers for the upcoming 2007—2008 season. The Lady Tiger divers are also lead by the veteran performance of senior Jen Miata under the guidance of Head Coach Leslie Hasselbach. Next season, the Tigers will turn to some of its younger divers to help for domination on the spring boards.

Ending another successful season, the 2005-2006 Tiger Baseball team finished with a 53-16 overall record including Omaha College World Series play. In the final 2006 baseball rankings, the Tigers finished fifth in the nation according to all three polls. The Tigers also reached first place on Febuwary 6th by Baseball America, eventually by the other two polls, and held onto the lead for a total of four weeks.

The Tigers dominated the ACC play with a 24-6 record, winning 24 of their last 27 games after getting swept at Virginia in their conference opener. The Tigers finishing first in both the Atlantic Division and overall play. This marked Clemson's first ACC regular-season title since 1995. In addition to winning ACC regular-season play, the Tigers also defeated their competitors in the ACC tournament with a 4-1 record in Jacksonville, Florida. This success in the ACC has only been achieved by six Clemson teams in the past, including Jack Leggett's first year as Clemson head coach in 1994. Righthander Josh Cribb and first-baseman Andy D'Alessio were both named to the First-Team All-ACC; both righthander Jason Berken and outfield Tyler Colvin were named to the second team. In addition, all three outfielders: Brad Chalk, Tyler Colvin, and DJ. Mitchell, second-baseman Taylor Harbin, third-baseman Marquez Smith, and righthander Sean Clark were named to the All-ACC Tournament team; this was the most ever from Clemson to be named. Tyler Colvin was also named MVP of the ACC Tournament.

As Clemson entered the regionals and College World Series, the 2006 baseball team became only the third team in history to win both ACC regular-season play, ACC tournmanet, and make it to Omaha. Clemson fans supported the Tigers and helped Clemson baseball set its third straight attendance record with 184,946 in attendance for the 39 home dates with an average of 4, 742 per game. Larry Penley has been the head coach of the golf team since 1983. He has helped the Tigers win 58 tournaments in his 23 years at Clemson, fourth best in NCAA history for a coach at one school. Under his guidance the Tigers have had a great beginning to their 2006-2007 season.

After coming off of a successful 2005-2006 season, the Tigers have managed to stay under par. To begin their season the Tigers had second-place finish at the Carpet Classic in Dalton, Georgia. This was followed with a seventh place finish at the Ping Preview at The Golden Horseshoe in Williamsburg, Virginia. They also recorded a sixth-place team ranking at the Isleworth-UCF Collegiate Invitational in Windemere, Florida. Freshmen, Kyle Stanley and Sam Saunders, have both been the lead scorers for this season, ranking regularly in the top ten at each invitational they attend. Running for the team to run down the hill is the fun part of many Clemson football fans everywhere on game days, especially when you are at the bottom of the hill facing the football players like these Rally Cats are every game.

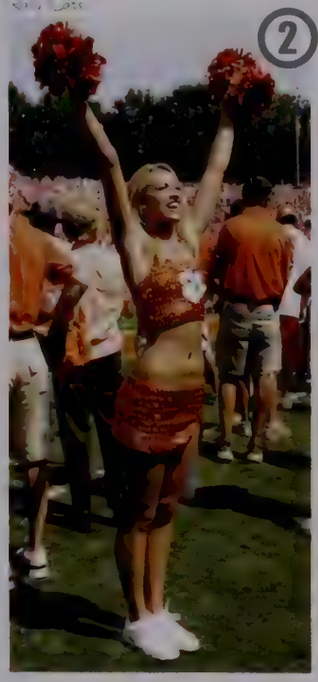
One of the songs that the Rally Cats dance to is the famous Tiger Rag anthem played by the marching band throughout football games. At times the student body can even be caught dancing along with the Rally Cats.



7 Flap-Ball-Change

3 Helping Out

At least once a season, little girls from the local area are able to go on the field and help get Clemson fans excited. The Rally Cats help set a good example for them to follow.

4 Team Huddle

At the end of each game the Rally cats gather together when Clemson's alma mater is played. They wave not only their hands at the end of the song, but also their pom poms.

5 Right Foot In

The Rally Cats' routines are all very difficult, but many times others join in on the fun of dancing at football games just like that beloved childhood dance, the hokey pokey.

6 Get Pumped

The Rally Cats do everything they can to get the student body pumped about cheering on their Tigers to victory. They all hope that their dancing will catch on in the stands.

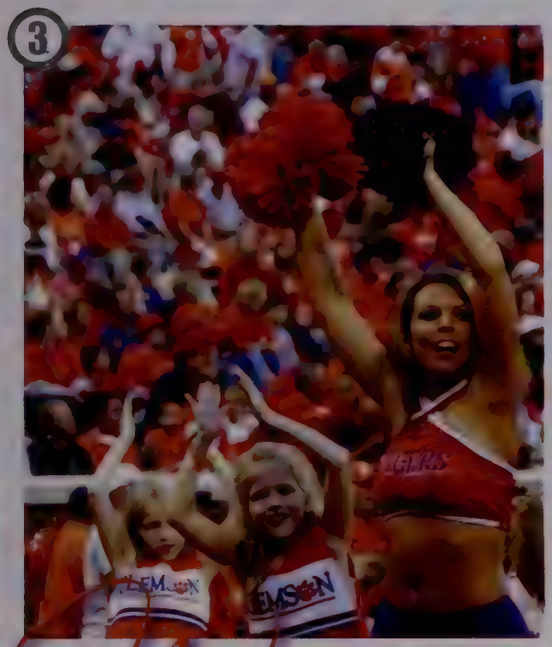
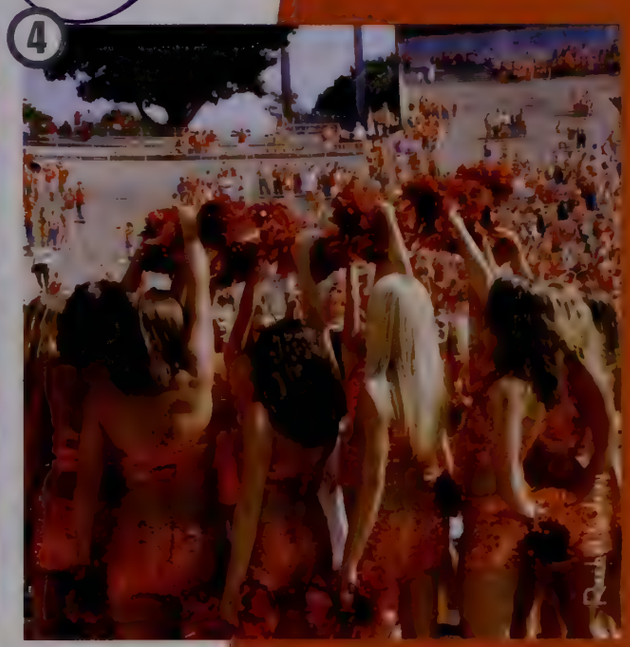
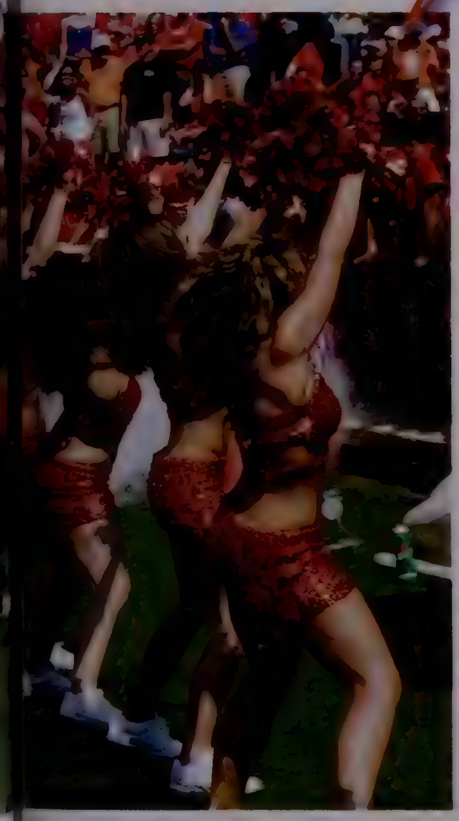
helping the Tigers dance their way to victory







With pom-poms and bright smiling faces, the Rally Cats never cease to have the utmost spirit for the Clemson Tigers. The team consists of 19 girls, who dedicate much of their extra time to the dance at various events.

A typical week of practice includes three two-hour evening practices and two 6:30 morning work outs. When the girls are not practicing or going to class, one might see them dancing at soccer, volleyball, football or basketball games.

As if their normal schedule were not enough, Rally Cats also perform at many other Clemson events. The Welcome Back festival, First Friday pep rally and parade, and the Homecoming pageant start the list. The largest event in the fall, other than Clemson football games, is Tigerama for which the Rally Cats prepare three dances. With November comes basketball where the rally cats dance at all the Men's home games.

In the spring, the team begins preparing to compete at NDA(National Dance Association) nationals which are held in April. For those who choose to be on the Nationals team, add one more practice a week. In order to allow kids to have the opportunity to learn more about the Clemson spirit, the Rally Cats hold clinics. Twice a year, once in football season and once in basketball season, the Rally Cats hold a clinic for children ages 4-high school to help pay for nationals.

The Rally Cats can be the first glimpse of Clemson spirit for some, whether it be at a clinic or a sporting event. They foster an integral part of Clemson spirit and thoroughly enjoy what they do. Sophomore Megan Langworthy said, "We work extremely hard, but most importantly we love the university we serve and the Clemson community as a whole."

TIGER Band

the band that shakes the south

Clemson prides itself on being first and foremost a family; not just a university composed of administrators, professors, and students. Talk to any member of Tiger Band, and the word you hear the most is "family." To the 200-plus band members, Tiger Band is their family during their years at Clemson - the people they turn to in the good times and the bad. And what's more, Tiger Band has the unique opportunity of bringing the entire Clemson community and beyond into a family fellowship through their music. What Clemson fan doesn't swell with pride each and every time they hear even the faintest strains of the Clemson Alma Mater or Tiger Rag?

This year Tiger Band began a partnership with the Clemson chapter of Habitat for Humanity, carrying their infectous spirit to the worksites and helping community families build homes to call their own. To promote this endeavor, the band picked selections from the musical "RENT" as one of their major shows for the 2006 season. During halftime at the UNC football game, Tiger Band performed "Seasons of Love," "Rent," "Today 4 U," "Will I," "What You Own," and "No Day But Today," while images of poverty and homelessness flashed on the video board. This innovative performance was intended to drive home the message that homelessness and poverty are needs to be met within the Clemson community. Tiger Band wants to ensure that they are doing their part to enrich the lives of others through this halftime show and their involvement with Clemson's Habitat for Humanity chapter.

In addition to the major show "RENT, The Musical," Tiger Band also performed major shows "Buddy Rich" and "1960s." Their New Stands music for 2006 included "S.O.S. (Rescue Me)" by Rihanna, "Dani California" by the Red Hot Chili Peppers, "Ain't No Other Man" by Christina Aguilera, Cascada's "Everytime We Touch," "We Run This" by Missy Elliot, and the Rascal Flatts hit "Me and My Gang." Tiger Band likes to include the entire audience in their musical performances by playing a little something for everyone.

Not every Clemson student is aware of just how Tiger Band works. The band membership is made up of students from almost every Clemson major, not just performing arts students. All students receive academic credits for the time that they spend in each of the separate bands. Tiger Band rehearses throughout the week as well as on Saturdays before football games. Clemson University is proud to be one of the few universities that sends a band to each of its athletic team's conference away games, and the full Tiger Band travels to any post-season event.

Tiger Band lives up to its motto by being an ambassador for Clemson University, sparking spirit, and providing entertainment to the university community and beyond. Being a member of Tiger Band also provides students the opportunity to develop life skills through training in teamwork and leadership. And who would say that they haven't succeeded in doing just that? Tiger Band entertains, Tiger Band works, Tiger Band represents, Tiger Band gives back. With its lively and inspiring renditions of timeless Clemson tunes, Tiger Band brings to life the words of Clemson's Alma Mater: "That the Tiger's roar may echo o'er the mountain height!" Clemson is proud to call Tiger Band its own.

Tiger Flag Line was added to Tiger Band in the 1970's by Dr. Copenhaver. He replaced the Military Color Guard with what we know today as Flag Line.

Flag Line has its tryouts during late spring/early summer. After that, all the members must attend a summer camp here at Clemson in preparation for football season. Flag Line's season goes from the beginning of summer to the last football game in the late fall.

Just like Tiger Band, Tiger Flag Line is out behind the Brooks Center practicing on every Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 4:00 to 6:00 during the first semester of the school year. Flag Line also goes through its entire routine countless times with the whole band, all the twirlers and every dancer on Saturday mornings prior to home games. In addition to performing at home games, Tiger Flag Line gets to travel to various away games and also Bowl Games. These expenses are covered by the school.

The group has been a staple of Tiger Band halftime shows and this year there are 16 young women that belong to Tiger Flag Line. As a result of all their hard work and dedication they always put on stellar performances during the halftime productions at Clemson football games.

Twirlers

Created over 50 years ago, the Tiger Twirlers have been an essential part of the Tiger Band participating in events such as the First Friday Parade, Tigerama and the band's halftime shows. This year the Twirlers have started a new tradition, along with the brand new Tiger Dancers, with their stand dances in front of the band. One of the other exciting traditions for the Twirlers is dotting the "i" when Tigers is spelled out on the field by Tiger Band. Each week a twirler has the opportunity to escort a special guest to complete the formation.

The group practices at least three times a week and on Saturdays before the day's big events. There are currently ten twirlers from all over the east coast, bringing together very different skills and personalities. The twirlers twirl one to three batons and sometimes even the five baton. This year, the twirlers have decided to enter the competitive arena and are traveling to several competitions during the off-season.

Pride. Clemson fans all claim to have it. They wear orange on Fridays, know the words to all the Clemson fight songs and the Alma Mater, and never miss a Clemson football game. The Tiger and Tiger Cub mascots truly have Clemson pride. They can be seen at every sporting event and pep rally decked out in a Clemson jersey or T-shirt. During football games the Tiger can be spotted on the field making fun of the other school's mascot. This year at the Georgia Tech game, the Tiger was holding a bug swatter with a yellow jacket in it. Another one of the Tiger's trademark traditions is doing pushups for every point Clemson scores during a football game.

One game in a previous season President Barker dressed up as the Tiger mascot. When asked about the experience this is what he had to say: "At a particularly warm day in September as I watched the players, cheerleaders and mascots from the President's Box in Death Valley, I decided I could help out by doing the push ups for the Tiger. I got the Tiger to agree and I changed into the suit at half time. I spent the entire 3rd quarter in the Tiger suit waiting for Clemson to score so I could do the push ups. During the 3rd quarter I tried to avoid thinking about being so hot and I had my picture taken with several little children who wanted a photo with the Clemson Tiger. (It took me 4 pictures to realize that I did not need to smile.) We finally scored, I did the push ups and then took the Tiger head off. The students were shocked and I heard one ask...'Hey, who's the gray-haired guy in the Tiger suit?' Go Tigers!"

The Tiger and Tiger Cub appeal to fans of all ages. Everyone loves to have their picture taken with the big orange cuddly creatures. As long as Clemson fans continue to take pride in their team, so will the Tiger and Tiger Cub!

a healthy break

People don't usually associate working out with being a break, but with a place like Fike, how could you not? Fike is more than a gym; it's a place where Clemson University students, faculty and staff can improve their ways of life and take a break from the regularity of college life. Many people come to Fike, whether to exercise on their own, take a turbo kick class or play a quick game of ping pong with friends. No matter what you choose to do while you are at Fike, you will definitely leave feeling better than when you came in. The weight machines provide an intense workout for those who want more muscle. The gym also offers bikes, elliptical and treadmills for those who want a great cardio workout. Fike provides a chance to improve their physical health and still have fun.

Racquetball

Fike is about more than just a great workout; it is also a place where people can meet for intense classes that provide specific training. The rooms in Fike are used as areas for dance team practices and tryouts for on-campus organizations. Fike also has multi-use courts that allow students to play club and intramural sports.

Fike also has numerous other rooms for racquetball and squash that are complete with viewing areas for fans to cheer on their favorite players. The recreation center also has tennis courts, both indoor and outdoor, volleyball courts and fields for other sports. Physical relaxation and rehabilitation can also be achieved at Fike. For a minimal fee, Clemson offers sports massage therapy, aquatic post rehabilitation and group training classes.

One of the best things about Fike is its accommodation of students, faculty and staff; it allows students to rent equipment for play and even borrow towels. The workout machines all offer resistance for people of many different physical levels. Fike offers so many the chance to gain pride in their body, mind and self.

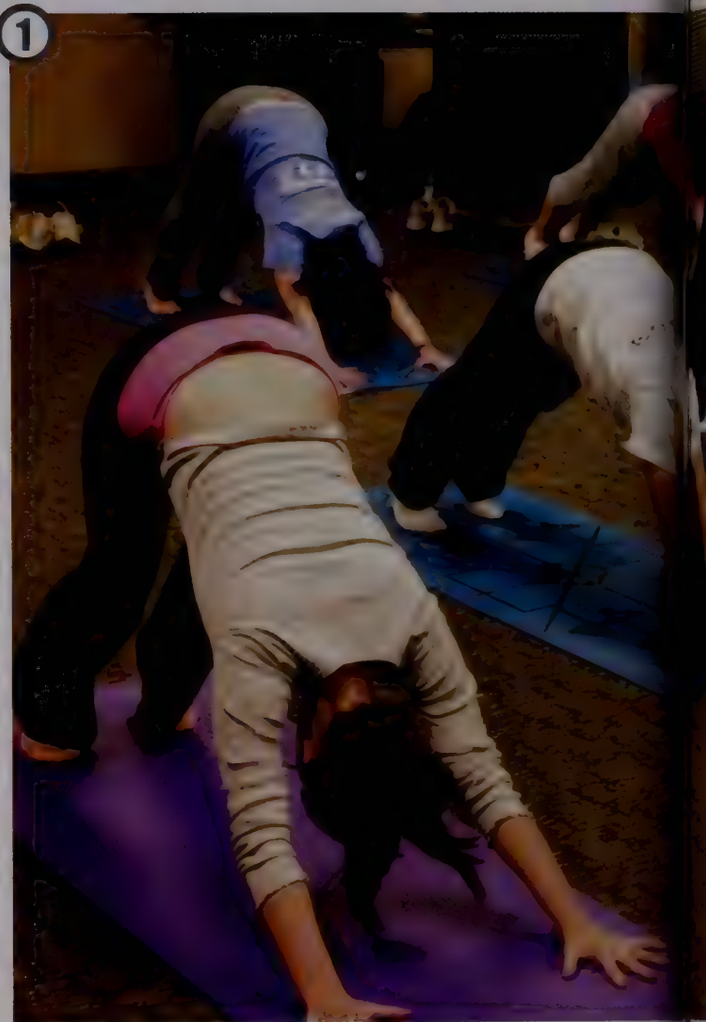
3 Feel the burn For those preferring to build muscle and exercise at a faster pace, strength conditioning classes are a good alternative to yoga. Hip-hop, self-defense, and kick boxing are also good alternatives offered.

4 Stretch Yoga classes are offered several times a week during both day and evening hours, a convenience for students with hectic academic schedules



5 Prep time Women aren't the only ones getting into the yoga trend. Men are often seen with mats on the second floor participating in group fitness classes.

Fike classes for fun and fitness

In addition to providing the Clemson community with access to top notch weight training, cardio, and exercise equipment, the Fike facilities are home to a variety of fitness classes and programs. For little to no fee, students, faculty, and guests of all ages and fitness levels can attend weekly offered sessions, ranging from high-intensity kick boxing and hip-hop classes to low-intensity body sculpting and yoga classes. Most classes, offered on the second floor of Fike, last 30 minutes and are taught by certified students or professionals.

Although kick boxing and yoga classes tend to be the most popular, in keeping with current American fitness trends, aquatic aerobics and cycling courses have a loyal following. Interested women and men are encouraged to "drop-in" to multiple exercise group sessions before determining a permanent personal fitness class schedule.

For those seeking more athletic training, Fike has recently added group personal training options to the personal training program. Group training, for individuals with previous personal training experience only, is offered each semester for 12 weeks and is designed to focus on specific fitness needs for individual members or the group as a whole.

No matter what the class (and a complete schedule and listing of classes is available at Fike), one thing is certain, fitness classes are an excellent alternative to traditional Fike workouts. Weight machine addicts grow accustomed to free weights and treadmill users add dance to their cardio routine. And as the health craze continues to grow, so will the number and size of classes.

Clemson's newest addition to the lo list of club sports, club football made i entrance into the league for its first seaso The new team is coached by former Clemson Tiger Footb starting quarterback and linebacker Patrick Sapp, wh also played linebacker in the National Football League f four years. The team is also coached by former playe Tommy Sharpe, Chad Jasmin and Levon Kirkland.

The team is led by their president, Scott Anders and the seniors are German transfer student MLB Albe Langebartels, Center: Daniel Blackmon, and Gua Daniel Taylor. The team gathers at least twice weekly practices during their fall season and also for workou in the fall and spring to keep in shape and prepare the games.

Clemson Club Football finished with a 4-5 record their first season. The team started off their seas with an away game to Duke that was forfieited by t Blue Devils club team, next they barely lost to UNC away. The team came back against UNC at home games later with a 15-14 win. Next the team won agai UNC-Greensboro, but lost to Atlantic Career Colle UNC-Greensboro, and UNC. However, the football tea came back strong with a 36-6 win over South Alabama finish out their first season as a Clemson club sport.

Clemson Crew

Clemson Crew is the co-ed club sport of rowing. Members go to practice Monday–Saturday for 2 hours to prepare for regattas. When the weather does t permit, rowers practice on the ergometer (the rowing achine). Fortunately, Clemson is an ideal place for rowing the water is usually flat and it's not too cold outside. emson Crew rows in 8's, 4's, pairs, and singles.

During regatta season, rowers travel every weekend regatta sites to participate in their beloved sport rowing. During the fall 2006 season, Clemson Crew welled to sites ranging from Aiken, SC, Knoxville, TN, d even to Boston, MA. Regattas attended include: attanooga Head Race, the Head of the Charles, the ad of the Tennessee, the Head of the Hooch, and the ad of the South.

The sport of rowing is year-long. In the fall season, embers race in a 5 kilometer Head race. In the spring, ces are called Sprints and are 2 kilometers long. Every ing break, Clemson Crew travels to Cocoa Beach, for an intense week of training on the Intercoastal terway. When they return, they host their own regatta, emson Sprints, on Lake Hartwell. Clemson Crew is great opportunity not only to get outside and enjoy e natural beauty of Clemson but to make new and nderful friends!

Established in 1976 here at Clemson, The Joint Chiefs is a club sport for all those who like to win and have fun. This year the team consists of 25 players ranging from graduate students, to freshmen to "super seniors." Their season is split up between the fall and the spring.

The fall is used for the team to get to know each other along with getting to know how to play the game, ultimate frisbee. They have practice every Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday from 8:30 to 10:00 at night. During the fall instead of having tournaments, the team scrimmages different colleges to prepare itself for the spring.

In the spring the season consists of tournaments. Every year they have at least five or six tournaments to attend. Usually the tournaments last for two days each. On the first day of the tournament all the teams play each other to get ranked in order to be placed into a bracket for the next day. The following day of the tournament usually consists of single elimination playoffs. Clemson hosted one tournament this spring and managed to place first overall.

The Joint Chiefs like to think that "no matter what happens we try to keep in mind that ultimate is a team sport, and we play to have fun."

Club lacrosse

The Clemson women's club lacrosse team does more than play lacrosse. For the past three years, the team has coached the annual FaceOff clinic in Greenville for high school players. The team is also very involved with the Eastside High School lacrosse team, and routinely helps coach Eastside's practices. The lacrosse team also has a big social event each semester, and they invite everyone on campus to help support their activities.

The women's club lacrosse team has seven league games during their spring season, with additional non-league games. In the fall, they attend lacrosse tournaments in various locations. Throughout the year, the girls log many miles on the Clemson athletic vans, traveling to Florida, Alabama, and Georgia schools to compete, along with making the trek to Columbia to play the Gamecocks.

1 Maggie Zemski looks to get open as her teammate throws the disc in their first ultimate game of the fall season.

S. Luckett

Students pull in, cars unload, books are sold, and classes start. The fall semester marks the beginning of another memorable year at Clemson, the start of another amazing football season, but also the start of another exciting sports season: intramural ultimate frisbee. While many think of frisbee as that small, circular disk students leisurely thrown around on Bowman, ultimate frisbee is a high energy, fast-paced, forty minute competitive game.

Composed of two twenty minute halves, ultimate games are played by seven people from each team on the field at a time. The goal of the game is to move the disk down the field and a point is scored when one of your team members catch it in the defense's end zone. Unlike other intramural sports, there are only co-rec and men's divisions—there is no women's league.

This fall was another exciting and close season in ultimate frisbee; games were played on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings beginning on September 11. After regular season play, teams with enough wins advance to the play-offs until the ultimate championship game. This year's co-rec champions were the Luckie Duckies; while the Forkers fought for victory in the men's league. Each year, winners earn the coveted "Champions" T-shirt.

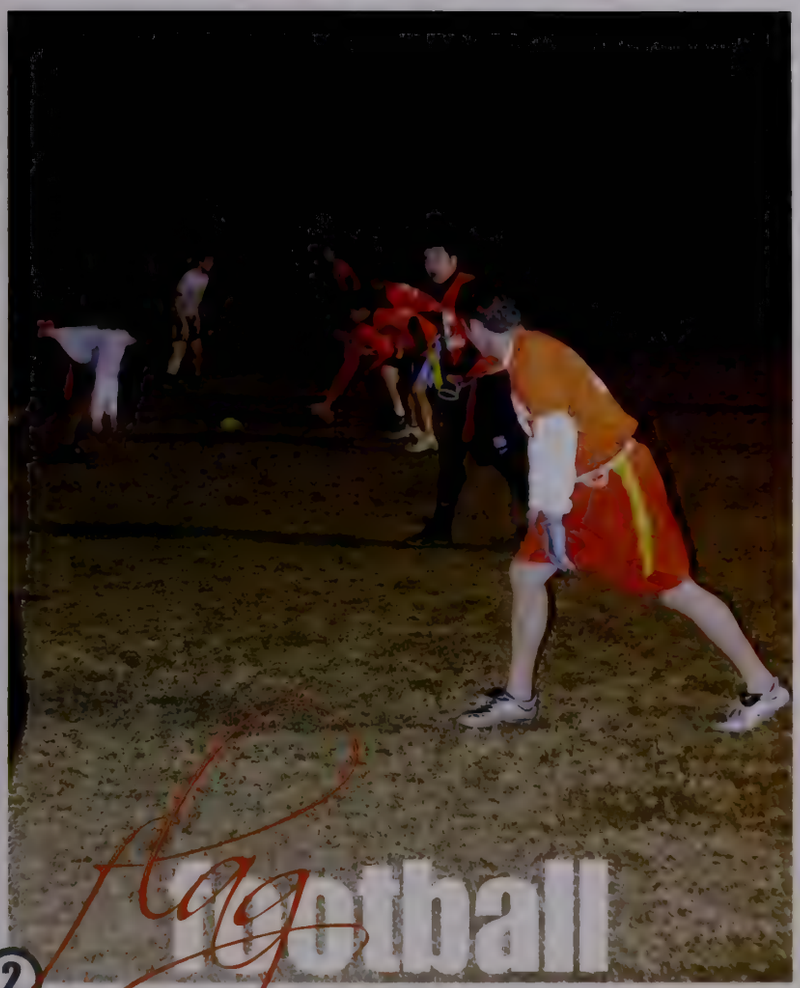
Clemson Perspective "Clemson is about having the best Gameday crowd, the best Homecoming victories, the best band that shakes the Southland, and meeting some of your best friends." Amy Eisner



Flag football

In flag football you may not be allowed to tackle your opponent, but this does not mean that it is any less intense than tackle football. Flag football is a fall sport that goes from early October to the middle of December. This year there were over a hundred teams that signed up for all three leagues, women's, men's, and co-rec's flag football. Games where held out at the intramural fields across from Fike Monday–Thursday throughout the season. The games started at 5 each day and went on into the night until 11 o'clock. Each game lasted 45 minutes and referees were present so the games would be called fairly.

Unlike the regular season games that are played on the intramural fields, the Championship games are played in Death Valley. Theta and C Dizzle were the two lucky women's teams that made it to the championship. They both played hard, but in the end C Dizzle walked away with the victory. After C Dizzle won many of their players stayed on the field to play in the co-rec championship game with team Biyahhhh. Biyahhhh played against WTE, and were also able to beat their opponent. DIK Pain and Bad Company were up against each other for the men's title in Death Valley, and after a good fight in the freezing cold Bad Company came out on top and won.

Story by Chrissy Dombrowski

2 The men's league is the largest division in flag football. Every play is important because they are in playoffs.

3 Theta pushes through C Dizzle in order to get to their quarterback. They cannot sack the quarterback but they can take her flag.

4 WTE waits for their team to make the football so that their kicker can send it down the field to Bryanna.

"When I think back on my best Clemson experience, I will have to say it's a feeling. It's the chills I get through my body when I shout the Clemson cheer "We are one body. All Solid Orange and Tiger Pride." Hilary Cumbest

3 Two co-rec players challenge each other at the net. One player goes up for the kill as his opponent waits for the block.

4 Erin Booth spikes the ball over the net. Her opponents in the women's league watch intently to be able to send the ball back.

During the Fall II season of intramu the volleyball courts in Fike came al as teams in three leagues battled each other fo volleyball victory. The three leagues for indoor volley were men's, women's, and co-rec.

If you walked past the volleyball courts during Fall II season you would hear a lot of noise as the play cheered on their teammates or yelled "Mine," "I got "Outside," "Free ball," and "Side-out." The intensity the sport was evident during on the court during ev game.

The indoor volleyball season lasted from m October to the beginning of December in 2006. Pla week increased the intensity of the game, as each te competed to become the champions. The winner of men's bracket was Natural Born Killers. The ladie The Ballers were crowned champions for the wom league. The co-rec champions for 2006 were L Tow you missed the indoor volleyball season of 2006, d miss it in 2007!

Table Tennis

Although not your typical intramural sport, the Campus Recreation Department goes to extra lengths to include types of sports in the intramural line-up. Table tennis is played both in the fall and in the spring inside the Fike Recreation Center. Like all sports, demand determines the division, allowing the department to offer CoRec, as well as men's and women's divisions.

Table tennis is a smaller sport, but about 30 teams took to the table to fight for the title of Intramural Champion during the spring season, with teams ranging from Greek teams to couples. The Axe Bombardiers took the title for the CoRec division; Caucasion Passion claimed the bragging rights for the Men's Doubles division; while Mevlut won for the Men's Singles division. Despite the less intense field play, the Clemson intramural tradition of competition was never-the-less seen throughout the play on the tables.

The reason I love Clemson is because it is everything other schools aren't. Nobody can compare to the traditions and history we have here. The school is just a bunch of buildings, it is the people all sharing the same pride of being a tiger that makes Clemson special. Kyli Atkinson

2 Following through, one of the women players in the Co-Rec league finishes her swing as the ball heads off into play.

3 Ready to swing at the ball, a player smiles in anticipation as others take over in the game at hand.

4 Pitching the ball overhand, a player hopes to make a pitch that scores a home run for his teammate.

A [illegible] sport to the Clemson intramural lineup, the first person immediately asked about quickball is "What is it?" [illegible] one of the Co-Rec teams in the spring season [illegible] their team "What is Quickball?" The answer is simple: to wiffleball because players pitch small waffle balls to batters with regular bats running and hits determined based on where the balls land after the hit. Balls that land behind the fence are home runs but balls that land within the fence are fair play.

Although the game was widely unknown to the general Clemson student population, 25 teams of players rush, rush up the challenge and [illegible] courts inside the Fike Recreation Center to participate in the intriguing game. Both Co-Rec and Men's [illegible] played during this inaugural season of play., hope to see the game continue throughout many [illegible] seasons of intramural games.

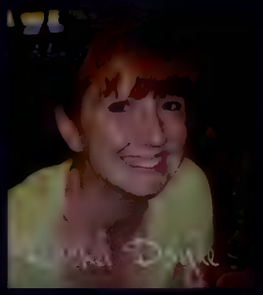
"My favorite Clemson memory would have to be my first football game in my freshman year. I had never heard the Clemson fight song yet. I remember it was a sea of orange throughout the stadium singing the same song while cheering our team on." Jennifer Swogger

Why did you choose to attend Clemson University?

Why would anyone want to be a chicken when you can be a tiger?

When coming to visit Clemson, the view looking over the bridge across the lake coming from Seneca was awesome.



I wanted to go to a school in the south and a school with a lot of school spirit and pride.

I chose Clemson because of the student's pride of the school.

"My favorite memory at Clemson is the first time I saw a football game in Death Valley the atmosphere was so intense. I can't even describe it." Esther Amarendran

Amanda and Katy

Have you ever been having a rough day and wished for someone from your family to just be there to comfort you? Well these siblings at Clemson don't have to worry about missing their family; they have each other to depend on. Amanda and Katy Giesken from Fairfield, Connecticut got to share a year of their Clemson experience together. Amanda, a senior in Psychology and Accounting and her younger sister Katy, a freshman studying Pre-Physical Therapy, are able to help each other and spend a lot of sister time together during their only year at Clemson with one another.

What made you decide to attend Clemson?

Amanda: A friend of the family recommended that I visit the school because he thought it would be a perfect fit for me. The second I set foot on campus, I knew this was the place for me!

Did having Amanda at Clemson have anything to do with your decision to attend?

Katy: Having Amanda at Clemson played a huge part in my decision to come here. It was nice knowing there would already be a familiar face when I arrived.

How do you help one another with school?

Katy: I think we do a good job of making sure the other one is staying calm and on task. We can talk about classes, sometimes we study together. We have lunch together a lot. I probably talk to her on the phone more now than I did before! She always makes sure that I relax, take a break from school, and have some fun.

Did Amanda give you any advice before you came here?

Katy: I wouldn't say she gave me advice exactly. Instead she really wanted me to come to Clemson also so she would call me and be like, "This is reason number 147 to come to Clemson..."

Amanda, what is it like having your little sister here?

I love having my sister here! We hang out a few times a week and have a lot of mutual friends. It's nice to have a piece of home close by since the rest of the family lives in Connecticut. Being here together, we get to spend a lot of time together and share the college experience. I'm glad to be able to share such an important part of my life with her.

Has it made you closer as sisters being here together?

Amanda: We've always been close. I frequently think of Katy as a best friend just as much as I think of her as a sister. We probably have gotten closer because we spend even more time together and share a lot of experiences. We were close to begin with, but it has definitely made us closer.

Katy, with Amanda graduating, is it going to be weird next year not having her around?

Next year is going to be a real test not having her around. I'm going to miss her a lot.

Amanda, how do your friends like having your little sister around?

My sister gets along well with all of my friends; in fact, I would refer to them more as "our friends" at this point! She's just one of the bunch!

"Since I was old enough to understand what college was, I wanted to attend Clemson. I love the campus, the traditions, the people, everything about it! Plus my dad would have killed me if I had wanted to go anywhere else." Meghan Bowling

"The very first day of my classes here at Clemson is my best memory. It is a day I will never forget...for I was officially a Tiger!" Tabitha Morris

What is something you learned your first year at Clemson?

It's a lot harder than high school; you have to work a lot harder.

Take introductory classes even if you don't think you need to.

I discovered what it meant to be independent both academically and socially. College takes work and shows students if they can sink or swim.

I learned to wash clothes, be better with time, and how to be more involved.

What do you want to do after college?

I want to get into sales. I have made the most of my Clemson experience and don't regret anything I have done here, but I am also excited to get out and have all my schooling pay off and feel like I am bettering society.

Get a job fast! Those loans won't repay themselves.

I would like to become a political broadcaster. I want the opportunity to tell listeners what is going on in the political world during an election or when something major happens in our country.

I can't wait to teach 1st grade, hopefully inner-city. I'm just ready to get in my classroom and teach my kids everything they need to know.

"I chose to attend Clemson because I grew up coming here and my blood runs orange. Seriously" Justin Sumatt

Debbie Rice

Clemson University prides itself in the amount of community service organizations and students who are active in community service each year. Debbie Rice, a senior in Civil Engineering, is one of many students who believes community service is an important part of our campus. Being a senior and also a co-op student keeps Debbie pretty busy, but she is still able to complete community service to improve the lives of people in Clemson and people around the world.

I came to Clemson because... Clemson just felt like a home away from home even though it's 500 miles from my hometown in Rockville, Maryland! The people at Clemson are genuine, which made a big difference in my decision to attend college here. I also think that Clemson is making great strides in its academic standings and it shows through integrity and other efforts in the classroom. I am proud to be a Clemson Tiger and honored to know that my degree will be worth even more in the future when Clemson becomes one of the country's Top 20 public universities.

What is one thing you'll miss when you graduate next fall from Clemson?
The friendships I've made through my sorority and church life, seeing the reflection pond and its beauty on a daily basis, Clemson ice cream, and the freedom to take naps in the afternoon (because what job gives you the chance to do that!?). Two things I will definitely not be missing are those long walks across campus to class at 8am and the 3rd floor of the library, where I spent oh, too many nights.

How important do you think it is to be involved in organizations on campus?
Being involved in organizations is where I met my best friends, and I think being involved has helped me contribute to the larger Clemson community. Through organizations like Circle K, Kappa Delta, and the Wesley Foundation, I have been able to do things like collect books for children in Africa, help instill self esteem in Girl Scout troops, and go on mission trips to New Orleans. Being involved gave me the chance to branch out and to make a difference in other people's lives, and it also makes college fun because we all know the college experience is more than just what you learn in the classroom.

How do you like the new ONE campaign Clemson is taking part in?
I really endorse the ONE campaign because it has been a chance for Clemson to stand out and showcase that we're making a difference. Clemson is the first university to join the ONE campaign against world violence and oppression and I think that just shows what the Clemson family is about—we're about having pride in where we come from and in giving back to others. The ONE campaign has personal significance to me because Circle K International over the past 2 years has worked to spread awareness on Clemson's campus about civil rights atrocities occurring in Northern Uganda. The ONE campaign is continuing our mission to spread awareness and to raise money for children in other countries around the globe.

"When asked what my favorite Clemson memory is, I think of a combination of football games I attended since I was eight years old dressing in purple and orange with tiger paw face paint, catching prizes at the tiger tailgate shows, and letting go of the orange balloons even though I really, really wanted to keep them." What advice did your parents give you before coming to Clemson?

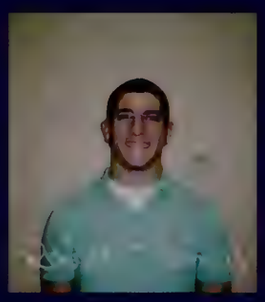
Have fun, learn as much as possible and be yourself.



They said be respectful of everyone I meet, and stand firm in what I believe in.

If we didn't allow it at home don't do it here.

Clemson Perspective

"Clemson is more than just schoolwork....It's friendships that grow with each passing semester; it's staying up late reminiscing about earlier Clemson memories, it's about being involved in more ways than just a student." Barrett Caldwell

Brian and Jessica Johnson

Brian Johnson, a senior, and Jessica Johnson, a sophomore, are siblings from Inman, SC that attend Clemson University. They both are majoring in Health Science. We asked them some questions about what it is like to be siblings at the same school:

What made you decide to attend Clemson?
Brian: Of the schools I looked at, this had the best atmosphere. I also enjoyed the fact they had a club ice hockey team and a lake nearby.
Did having Brian at Clemson have anything to do with your decision to attend?
Jessica: Having him here definitely had an influence on where I decided to go because once he came here I started to become a Clemson fan and came to visit and loved the atmosphere.
How do you help one another with school?
Brian: I've been here a couple of years longer so I've been able to give her the inside scoop of what to take and what not to take. With Jess here now I've become more motivated even though mom and dad don't look at the report card. They'll just find out from her.
Jessica: Brian has been able to help me in choosing what classes to take and which professors I should or shouldn't try to get.
What's it like having your little sister here?
Brian: Since Jess has been here, I don't think there's been a dull day. It's also been a blast taking part of what was enjoyable living at home such as playing tennis on campus or water skiing with the team out on Lake Hartwell.
Has it made you closer as siblings being here together?
Brian: Even though Jess and I are only two years apart, I didn't feel as though we were that close growing up. I'm thankful she followed in my footsteps since we've grown much closer.
Jessica: Growing up I was always closer to our younger brother and we've remained close since I've come to Clemson, but Brian and I have gotten a lot closer as well.
With Brian graduating, is it going to be weird next year not having him around?
Jessica: It's going to be so different without him here because I've become so used to having him around as well as all his friends, who have become like big brothers and are graduating; it's going to be a major change not being able to call Brian up and just hang out, play tennis, or go out on Lake Hartwell to water ski.

Who is your hero and why?

My hero is Beethoven. Not only because I can appreciate his music, but he overcame the problems of being a musician AND being deaf to go on to write extraordinary pieces. He never let his circumstances obstruct his path to reaching his goals.

My grandmother because her accomplishments have inspired me to want to do great things with my life.

I'm not from a single parent household, I love my dad to the fullest, but my mom is my hero. She has done so many things for me. I call her all the time, just to hear her familiar voice. Some guys may be ashamed to say it, but I'm not. I'm a mommy's boy and I love her to death.

My hero is Jesus Christ. Because my ultimate and fundamental goal is to glorify God with every aspect of my life, regardless of persecution.

How many times have you changed your major?

I have never changed my major. However, every spring when spring fever sets in, I always threaten to change my major to something easier.

None. Engineering for life.

I started as Bio-Chemistry, then changed to more general Pre-Med, but decided I hated Calculus and Chemistry. I love English and being creative so I ended up switching to Graphic Communications.

Zero as an undergraduate. One as a graduate student from Material Science and Engineering to school counseling.

"My favorite Clemson memory was when a whole group of us all rode the CAT bus from Berkley Place to downtown to go out. It was safe and the CAT busses go everywhere. Who would have thought." Ashley Semson

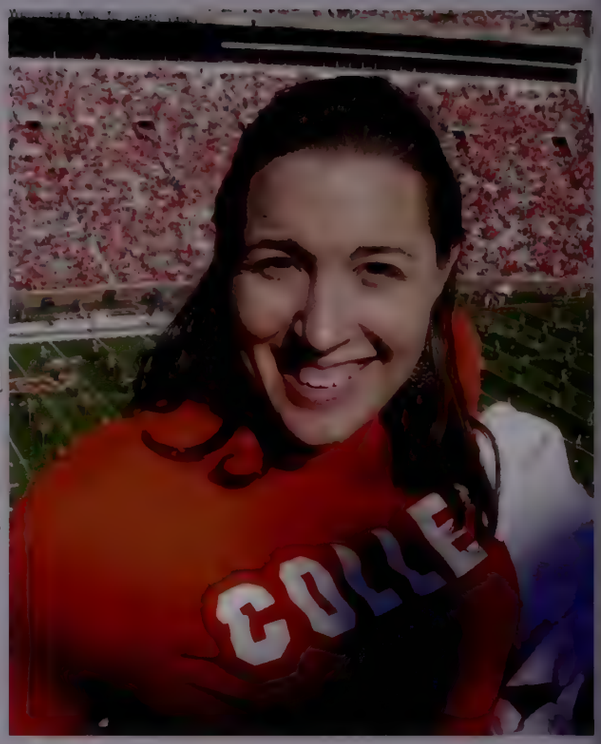
Jessica Campbell



Most students get to enjoy studying abroad through the many programs offered at Clemson University. It is a great chance students at Clemson get to experience. Jessica Campbell got to experience life in Madrid, Spain while in high school and then chose to attend Clemson University for her college years. Jessica can easily compare her time in Madrid to her time in Clemson and be thankful for both of her experiences.

There were colors everywhere! The grass was a vibrant green. There were blossoming pink and white trees. But most of all, I noticed the bright T-shirts most students wore—especially orange. This was my first impression of Clemson University in the spring of 2004. I was comparing Clemson's campus with the varying shades of grey that make up the University of Madrid, Spain—where I studied during my year of independent studies after high school. My name is Jessica Campbell. Except for first grade when we lived in Costa Rica, I was home schooled all the way through high school. My parents were Presbyterian missionaries; we held church in our family room every Sunday. Our ministry was to the English-speaking community in Madrid—which meant, mainly military and businessmen and their families. Although we all spoke English, we were not all from the same country. Growing up with friends from all over the world gave me a love for internationals. When I came to Clemson, this love found a resting place in Reformed University Fellowship International—a Christian organization on campus that serves internationals.

Before living in Spain, I lived in South Carolina, North Carolina, Ohio and Costa Rica. But coming to Clemson was a huge culture shock for a 19 year old who had lived in Spain since she was 8. People from the southern United States smile at complete strangers, boys open doors for girls, and people leave their backpacks open on the tables in the library without a qualm. In the metropolis of Madrid, these behaviors are unheard of.

I'm now a junior, double majoring in Elementary Education and Modern Languages (Spanish). Lord willing, I will graduate in May 2008.

Story by Jessica Campbell

'Clemson pride is orange on Friday's, it's walking to the stadium screaming cadence counts, its chanting orange and white at FSU, it's walking through the airport with your school colors and having people approach you to shake your hand and say 'Go tion is one I have shared with my own family. On Saturday game days we get up and dress in solid orange and as a family go to the Botanical Gardens. A bench was placed in the gardens in honor of my grandfather who was a Clemson graduate of 1930. We have always made a point to visit his bench in remembrance of him. On a day filled with Tiger traditions, it is important to slow down and remember those who walked before us.

What is your favorite Clemson memory?

My freshman year when it snowed. Class was canceled, and that day was full of good times!

At my first football game last year, when we won the game we 3 seconds left. I was on the hill so everyone rushed and it was really exciting. All my memories in Lever my freshman year were always good, we had so much fun.

My favorite Clemson memory has been all the nights I spent in my hallmate's rooms laughing until two in the morning.

When the football team beat FSU at home.

What would you do without your cellphone?

I would definitely have to plan ahead more. My cell lets me live every planned minute of my life tentatively because you never know when you may get a call that will change all of you plans around.

Not much different than I do now. I probably would have brought a phone for my room here at Clemson.

I actually have two cell phones, so I would probably not be engaged because I'm in a long distance relationship and that's how we keep in touch.

I would feel disconnected from people.

low many hours do you spend on Facebook and Homework?

I spend seventeen hours on facebook and twenty hours on homework.

Facebook is what I do when I am procrastinating. I know I need to study, but it's just so much fun. So, I spend three hours on facebook a day and an hour and a half of studying per day.

I spend maybe five minutes everyday or so on facebook and probably five to nine hours on homework.

Facebook is an easily accessible distraction. I spend thirty minutes a day on facebook and two hours of studying.

M favorite moments of Clemson pride were two games in the fall of 2005. The double overtime game vs. Miami and the eight eight soccer game were the most intense games I have ever seen for those two sports and the most pride I have ever seen for any team." Steve LiCloit

Almost every Friday the students of Clemson get to read The Tiger, the first collegiate newspaper in South Carolina. The newspaper covers news, opinions, sports, developments around Clemson, and the newest section called Time Out includes things such as music and movie reviews, articles about things college students care about. The Tiger staff works hard each week to publish a great paper for our student body and behind that staff is Editor Julie Ledbetter. Julie, a Senior English major, is also involved in many other campus organizations such as CLEMSONLiVE, Omicron Delta Kappa, Alcohol and Other Drug Task Force, and Clemson Community Coalition.

I chose to attend Clemson because.... I fell in love with the campus and all the people were so nice here.

How did you get involved with The Tiger?

I went to an informational meeting at the beginning of the year and then just started out as a staff writer.

How do you usually react when you get compliments and criticism about The Tiger?

I love getting feedback about The Tiger. When we get criticism, good or bad, I know that people are reading it and paying attention to what we are doing, and that's a good feeling. We work really hard every week so it's always nice to know that people appreciate it.

What's the latest you've had to stay in the office to work on the paper?

I have been there as late as 8 a.m. the next day.

Is it tough to get the stories together and published within a week?

A week doesn't seem like a quick turnaround until you remember that everyone on staff is a student. It's pretty difficult to get everything organized so quickly. I always wish we had more time to perfect everything.

Over the years, what the most interesting story you had to cover?

I got to cover when they began rebuilding the Ridge. I transferred here so I wasn't here when it burnt down. So it was cool for me to get to do that story.

me and every other person there. As the players walked up to the rock, my excitement began to explode. The crowd was so loud that [illegible] hear myself think. The cannon rang out and the players went down the hill. Everyone was chanting and cheering for the Tigers and [illegible] orange. I got chills all over my body! At that moment I knew I had chose the right school!" Lori Williams

"I like Clemson because it gives you the opportunity to meet so many new people and try new things. I remember my freshman year playing frisbee golf at 1 a.m. because we had nothing else to do. Until I came to Clemson I had never heard of frisbee golf or realized how serious some people take it." Estelle Patrick

psychology club

The psychology club seeks to provide students with the resources needed to succeed in psychology. The club offers a variety of meetings, class information exchanges, graduate school preparation sessions, etc.) and socials, seeking to promote student and faculty interaction. Psychology Club members also volunteer on a regular basis at Patrick B. Harris Psychiatric Hospital in Anderson.

zeta tau alpha

Zeta Tau Alpha, a Greek-affiliated sorority, is extremely passionate about their philanthropy, which is breast cancer awareness and education. Every year we hold our "Big Man On Campus" event, which raises money for the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. This philanthropy event raises more money than any other philanthropic even on Clemson's campus. Last year we raised over $18,000 for the foundation. Zeta Tau Alpha is currently very active in the "Save Lids To Save Lives" campaign as well. Our efforts to spread awareness about this campaign have helped Clemson University to become the top university in the nation for collecting lids this year. Some of our other community service involvement includes visiting cancer patients at Anderson Memorial Hospital and playing bingo with residents as at retirement home in Seneca. We are also proud to be name the "Panhellenic Chapter of the Year" at Clemson for 2006.

Campus Crusade for Christ is an interdenominational organization focused on influencing college students with the gospel. Our desire is to win students to Christ, build them in their faith and then send them out to take the message of God's love to the world. This is done through weekly meetings on Tuesday nights, small group Bible studies, conferences, retreats and summer projects. We are excited about building spiritual movements everywhere, so that everyone knows someone who truly follows Jesus.

Ctv

TV, Clemson Television, is Clemson's on-campus elevision channel. CTV can be watched in dorms and on-campus apartments on Channel 99. 2006 was a big year for CTV. First of all, they changed their name from CCN (Clemson Cable Network) to CTV. Secondly, they were able to stream shows 24/7. In 2005, CTV was temporarily down, but now it is back on the air. CTV has added numerous regular shows, produced by students. Not only does CTV provide elevision entertainment for students, but it also works with various departments and organizations, ncluding TAPS, The Tiger, the communications lepartment, and the digital production arts program. Tune into channel 99 when you are on-campus to see he talented students of CTV.

panhellenic council

The College Panhellenic Council at Clemson is the governing body of ten Panhellenic Sororities active on campus. The council meets weekly focusing on issues affecting the entire Panhellenic community. This year the council coordinated a "Closet Cleanout" to collect and donate clothes to the Central Helping Hands. The Council hosted a scholarship dessert to recognize the excellent academic performance of members and grant scholarships for the Best New Initiate and Most Outstanding Junior Member. Each year we host a Homecoming BBQ while Homecoming floats are built on Bowman Field. The Council hosted speakers presenting programs such as "Girls Fight Back", "Sex Signals" and "Hazed and Confused." The Panhellenic Council was also a co-sponsor of the Empower Campaign to promote responsible decision-making. In addition, the council coordinated a Clemson football t-shirt sale to raise money for a visual impaired Pickens High School student in need of a specialty computer.

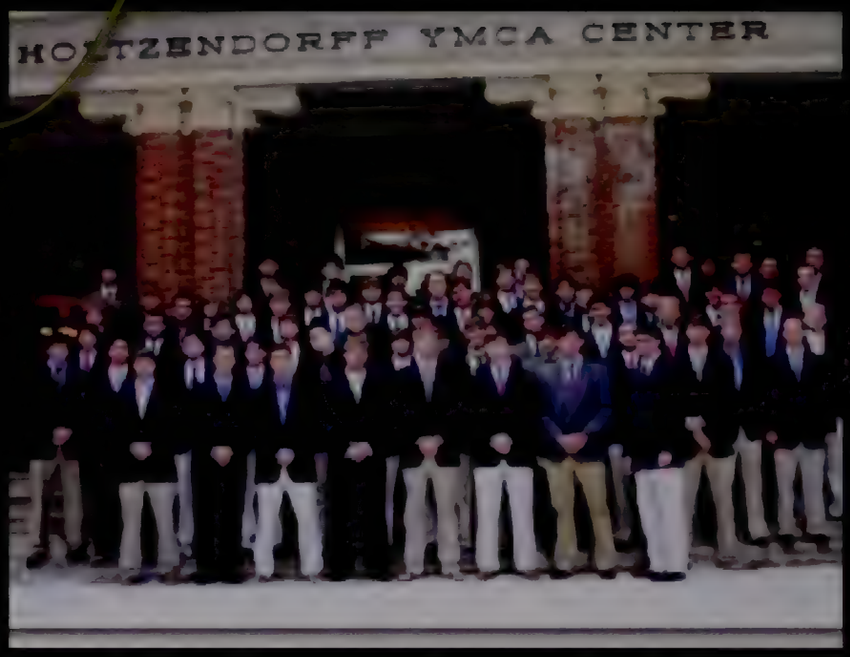
Sigma Chi



The fundamental purpose of the Sigma Chi Fraternity is the cultivation, maintenance, and accomplishment of the ideals of friendship, justice, and learning within our membership. Here at Clemson University, the Eta Psi chapter strives for excellence in academics, extracurricular activities, community involvement, intramurals and dedication to the high ideals established by the national Fraternity at large. Men from all over the country are represented in the chapter, which is one factor that makes Sigma Chi so unique compared to many other chapters on campus. Our yearly Derby Days event was a big hit this year, with a concert by Corey Smith to end the week on a high note. The event raised over $37,000, going straight to the Children's Miracle Network in Greenville. The chapter is going strong with over one hundred active members and will continue on the road to success with its strong leadership and alumni backing.

IGA HOMETOWN PROUD

Lake City, SC

TAPS wants to thank everyone who supported us by submitting Pride quotes. This book would not be the same without your quotes.

Thank You!

TAPS wishes to congratulate the graduates of the classes of 2006 and 2007. It is graduates like you that make Clemson proud.

Congratuations!

"What makes me proud to be a Clemson student is the lifestyle that the university gives to their students. Besides many options of study, there are many social opportunities here as well." Wai Chan

"The school spirit I have gained from going to football games and going to Clemson has changed my perspective of orange from a color to a point of pride and excitement for my school." Christopher Toedosio

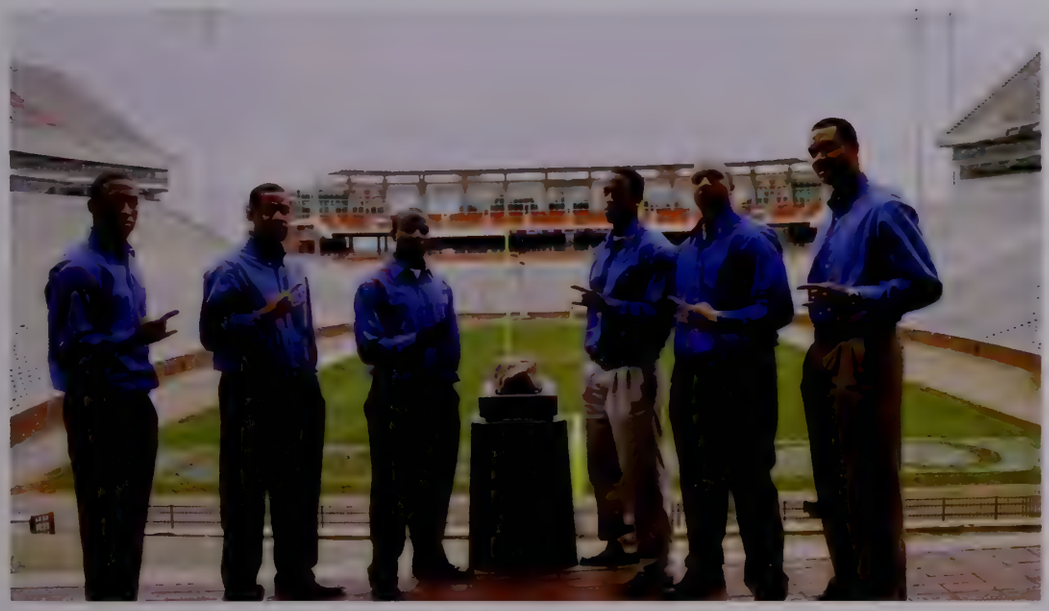
Howard's Rock, a tradition of great pride for Clemson

Haley Binowski, Sarah Mirza, Mindy Rapp, Lindsey Iori, Lindsay Still and Jessica Edwards



Phillip Lindsay, Terrell Richardson, Chris Dandridge, Emmanuel Dobson, Sheldon Waiters, and Lamar A. Simmons of Phi Beta Sigma.

Volume 97 of TAPS is full of Clemson students expressing their pride in Clemson. Clemson is a place that gets in your blood. Once you step foot onto this beautiful campus, you will never be the same. The pride we have for our school is seen every day of our lives. Clemson is a place we will cherish forever. We can proudly declare, "We are Tigers for life!" And that is...

Pride

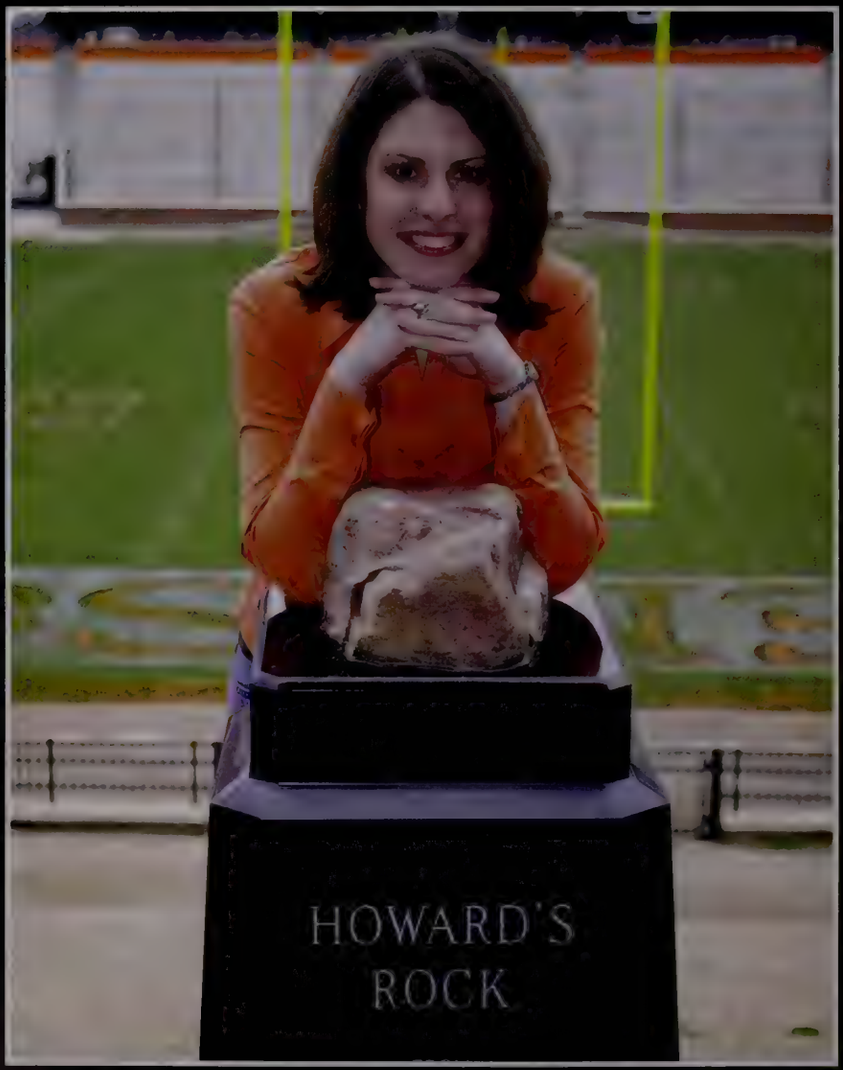
a letter from the editor



Dear Fellow Clemson Students,

I am so proud to have served you as the TAPS managing editor this year. Every moment spent working on the book has been amazing. This issue of TAPS is full of pride for our wonderful school. I greatly enjoyed reading your quotes about Clemson pride. We are so privileged to attend this university, and your quotes reminded me of that even more.

It is my desire, as well as the 2007 TAPS staff, that as you read this issue of TAPS you will recognize the great pride we have for our school. We strived to cover the main events of Clemson life from student activities to athletics to academics and organizations. We want this book to be one you will cherish for years to come; one you will share with your family and friends. Thank you for the opportunity of recording the history and pride of Clemson University.

Go Tigers!
